Bush calls for partnership with China, Soviets

Newsday

BEIJING — President Bush, filled with nostalgia, returned Saturday to the nation where he once served as U.S. envoy and suggested to China's leaders that their country, the Soviet Union and the United States could form a partnership for peace.

Bush, in an effusive toast to his hosts at a banquet in the Great Hall of the People, recalled with some poetic emotion his service here as envoy 14 years ago and he congratulated China on the changes it has made and the prospect of improved relations with the Soviets after three decades of estrangement.

And, noting that the United States and the Soviets have grown closer, concluding one arms agreement and working toward others, Bush said the United States and China "as nuclear powers and as permanent members of the U.N. Security Council have a responsibility for preserving world peace and international stability."

President Yang Shangkun, as host, raised his glass first and told Bush: "At present, the world is undergoing a change of a turning-point nature, with confrontation giving way to dialogue and tension to relaxation. Striving for peace and development has become a strong historic trend."

The Chinese president was stressing a point that Bush was expected to hear Sunday in meetings with other leaders, including the venerated Deng Xiaoping, officially retired but still China's pre-eminent leader, Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang and Premier Li Peng.

The Chinese, sources said, believe that big-power politics, based largely on military might, was giving way to a new and changing international order based on economic growth and influence.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who is expected to visit here in the spring, has been delivering a similar message as he has pledged cuts in his country's military might and appealed for arms reduction agreements with the United States and the West.

But Bush, who has vowed not to use a "China card," seeking better relations with Beijing as leverage against the Soviets, nevertheless was much more generous in his praise for China than he has been toward Moscow. And he said the United States and China have forged "ties of friendship between our defense establishments, even as we have found a diplomatic unity in our shared opposition to policies of international aggression and domination." Such language, in the past, usually meant the Soviets.

The president visits as China celebrates 10 years of full diplomatic relations with the United States established by President Carter.

Bush, writing in 1979 in the Washington Post, denounced Carter's action as a dangerous betrayal because the then-president also had cut off further military aid to Taiwan. And Bush warned that Carter's action would threaten Taiwan and encourage communist Chinese aggression.

Such words were forgotten, however, as Bush, the fourth sitting president to visit China, arrived in Beijing and made an unscheduled stop in Tiananmen Square, the ceremonial center of the nation bound by the tomb of Mao Zedong, the Great Hall of the People and the Gate of Heavenly Peace leading into the Forbidden City of China's emperors.

Bush greeted several Chinese among the thousands of men and women making their way home at rush hour. A great portrait of Mao overlooked the scene, lighted by a setting sun made red by the ever-present dust blown in off the Gobi desert.

When Bush first came to China as U.S. envoy in 1974, he had just emerged from the maelstrom of having served as Republican national chairman during Watergate. He had hoped President Ford would give him a Cabinet post and perhaps want him as vice president, but he was sent to Beijing instead.

He and Barbara Bush rode bicycles and explored China's vastness while he recovered from his political wounds.

Experts comb jet for clues

Los Angeles Times

HONOLULU — Federal investigators began an inch-by-inch inspection Saturday of the fuselage around a truck-sized hole that ripped in the side of a United Airlines Boeing 747 near Hawaii, dumping nine passengers to their deaths from more than 20,000 feet.

Aging jets — A3

Searchers crisscrossed the Pacific Ocean but found no bodies.

"We're looking hopefully for survivors," said Coast Guard spokesman Keith Spangler. "But you know a normal human being just can't last that long, even in 70-degree waters. Plus they fell 22,000 feet." If anyone lived through the fall, Spangler said, chances for survival were slim. He said the sea was infested with sharks.

At least one of the victims was sucked into the whirling blades of a jet engine. A medical examiner found "multiple small body parts" inside.

The investigators, headed by Lee Dickinson, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board, were trying to find out why one cargo door and a large part of the 747 fuselage came apart early Saturday as United Flight 811, carrying 357 people, climbed away from Honolulu International Airport and turned toward Aukland, New Zealand.

A hundred miles south of Hawaii, the door and a section of metal above it tore out of the fuselage and the jumbo jet decompressed. In addition to the passengers who were sucked out, 27 others, including several crew members, were hurt by flying debris. Two engines failed and pilot David Cronin returned and landed the jet hard but safely.

It was the third in a recent series of structural failures on Boeing planes. Last April, the top of a 737 peeled off during an Aloha Airlines

Agency gives children a Head Start

By JENNIFER KAUTH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Laughter accompanies the whirring of a borrowed blender as a cluster of children help Head Start family educator Dana Mikesell hold the top down on a strawberry milkshake.

In another part of the room, a two-story block tower tumbles, only to be rebuilt with the gentle urging of a parent volunteer, while a Tonka truckload of pretend gravel buzzes toward the construction site.

Two-hundred-forty Magic Valley children, mostly 4-year-olds, get a head start on life each year through a popular federal program that may undergo a fiscal rejuvenation in its 25th year.

A line in President Bush's "kinder, gentler" budget asks Congress to give Head Start – a Great Society-era program designed to alleviate the effects of poverty on children – a $250 million raise for the 1990 operating year.

By 1993, Bush would like to see that program's budget rise to $1.6 billion from the current $1.2 billion. The president has said he would like to see the money spent to provide 95,000 more children with the opportunity to participate in Head Start.

The budget proposal is good news for the local Head Start program, which turns away more kids than it enrolls each year.

Plant to bring city jobs

By KIRK MITCHELL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Although attorney's fees, expenses and debt have sapped two-thirds of the proceeds from the city's recent $4.2 million legal settlement over its sewage treatment plant, what is left provides a base for a major new sewage treatment expansion.

What's more, the expansion could be the deciding factor in luring to Twin Falls a large new company that may bring "a substantial number of jobs," city officials say.

"The award was extremely timely," said City Manager Tom Courtney. "Without the award, we would be scrambling to put the (sewage treatment expansion) project together."

He said the award may have saved city residents from paying higher sewer rates to finance the expansion.

In January, the city settled out of court for $2,675,000 with Envirotech Corp., which had supplied the city in 1974 with faulty pollution-control equipment, Courtney said.

The settlement followed judgments over a 11-year span of about $1.1 million against other suppliers and a previous $416,000 payment by Envirotech.

Of the $4.2 million total, the city will keep less than a third.

About $1 million will go to the federal Environmental Protection Agency, which loaned the city money for repairs required because of faulty equipment.

Even though the city won't see that portion of the money, Courtney said he regards it as a net gain for the city: If the city had lost the lawsuit, sewer rates might have risen to repay the loan, he said.

Another $542,647 will go to pay expenses, mainly for expert witnesses who testified on the city's behalf, Courtney said. Other expenses included motel bills, airplane tickets, telephone calls and meals, as the city's attorneys flew all over the country taking depositions from witnesses.

Attorneys' fees swallowed another big chunk. The city paid $1.142 million to the law firm of Hepworth, Nungester & Lezamiz.

The contingency contract between the city and the law firm was typical of agreements between municipalities and attorneys, Courtney said. The lawyers were paid 35 percent of the first $1 million recovered, 30 percent of the second million, 25 percent of the third million and 20 percent of the rest, he said.

If the law firm had lost, it would not have been compensated for an accumulation of 11 years of work, Courtney said.

The extensive preparation – during which some 80 file drawers of material was compiled – was necessary to match the high-powered legal expertise of manufacturers and suppliers,

Tower, Bush to take confirmation fight to senators

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — John Tower is going public with his campaign to become defense secretary as President Bush vows to go face-to-face with wavering senators in an effort to win enough Democratic support to get Tower confirmed.

Tower was booked onto a Sunday morning network television interview show and is planning a speech, probably Tuesday, at the National Press Club.

Bush, meanwhile, told reporters in Tokyo on Saturday he will meet individually with 10 or more Democratic senators after he returns to the White House on Monday from a four-day Asian trip.

"I'll do it personally and I'll do it as forcefully as I can," the president said. "I will encourage people to look at the facts."

Some Tower opponents have said perceptions that he is a drinker and womanizer and may have conflict of interest problems are valid reasons to vote against him even if there is no proof of such things.

"That's not fair enough and that's not high enough a standard when it comes to the confirmation of an important nominee of this nature," said Bush. "So I have made some calls and I will be talking to whoever remains open minded."

Among the Democrats who said Friday they have not decided how to vote when the Tower nomination reaches the Senate floor was Lloyd Bentsen, a veteran of many close political encounters with both Bush and Tower in years of Texas politics, and Howell Heflin of Alabama.

The decision to assign a high-profile role to Tower and have the president exert the power of private Oval Office meetings is part of a battle plan worked out with Senate Republican leaders in an effort to salvage the nomination or, at least, save face for a GOP president on the job only a month.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas detailed part of the plan on Friday, hours after members of the Senate Armed Services Committee dealt Tower, a former colleague and one-time chairman, a crushing blow.

The committee voted 11-9 along party lines late Thursday to recommend that the full Senate reject the Tower nomination.

"I cannot in good conscience vote to put an individual at the top of the chain of command when his history of excessive drinking is such that he would not be selected to command a missile wing, a SAC bomber squadron or a Trident missile submarine," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the committee, before other Democrats echoed his view.

Nunn also was booked onto a Sunday talk show, one airing in Washington in a time slot just before the show featuring Tower begins on a rival network.

On Friday, Tower met with Dole and Vice President Dan Quayle for a strategy session.

Democrats hold a 55-45 majority in the Senate, meaning Bush must pick up at least five Democrats to assure Tower's confirmation. Dole said he believed all 45 Republicans were behind Tower.

Dole said the White House is preparing a summary of the confidential FBI file on Tower that can be released to the public in hopes of demonstrating that allegations against him are baseless.

Courtney said.

"We would have been pleased if (the money recovered) would have covered our costs," he said. "They really did an excellent job for us."

When the city finishes paying its obligations, it will have netted about $1.3 million to spend on treatment plant expansion needed to meet expected development. But because the city paid some of those expenses before the settlement, $1.9 million is actually available for the project, he said.

Because of the funds, the city is in a good position to qualify for about $800,000 in grant money from the Economic Development Administration, Courtney said.

The sewer plant expansion, in turn, may be a major factor in persuading a large company to locate in Twin Falls, he said.

The city's existing treatment plant can't handle the company's waste-load and it is doubtful the company would come if it had to build its own treatment facility, Courtney said.

Courtney wouldn't name the company, but he said it is expected to decide in the next three months whether to come to Twin Falls.

"I think it looks pretty good," he said. "It would provide a substantial number of jobs."

Another benefit the company would bring, besides boosting the local economy, would be that its initial property taxes could be used to help pay for the sewage treatment expansion, Courtney said.

That was made possible through the new tax increment law passed by the 1988 Legislature, which enables a city to lure a business into town by earmarking that company's future property taxes for development-oriented improvements, such as increased utility capacity, he said.

The expansion, approved in principle by the City Council last summer, would cost as much as $4 million. The settlement and the EDA grant would combine for $2.7 million of that. A bond issue would provide the rest and, under the tax increment law, the city could guarantee to the company that its property taxes would be funneled into paying off the bonds, Courtney said.

"It's a good economic tool," he said. "The industry's tax dollars are being used to build the infrastructure that is necessary to support the industry."

As part of the expansion, the city will add enough treatment capacity for other prospective businesses thinking of locating in the area, Courtney said.

Meantime, the city will substantially improve its treatment capacity and likely will not have to increase taxes, he said.

"It's a unique opportunity," Courtney said. "Hopefully we'll be in a position to start construction this summer."

flight from Hilo to Honolulu, killing an attendant and hurting 61 others. In December, an Eastern Airlines 727 was forced down in West Virginia after a 14-inch hole opened in its fuselage. Nobody was hurt.

Dickinson said his 16-member team of experts would pay particular attention to the cargo door and its locking mechanisms and the aircraft cargo area. By nightfall Saturday, the Coast Guard had not recovered the door and Dickinson said the chances of finding it diminish with each passing hour. He said the door was one thing investigators would especially like to see.

Despite the damage and the failure of two of its four engines, Cronin landed the aircraft with nothing more than a hard jolt and some ruptured tires.

Dickinson said neither he nor any members of his team will try to offer any explanation shedding light on the accident for several weeks. "We will not be making any causal determinations while we are here on scene ...," he said. "But (eventually) we will figure out what happened and why."

Although representatives of Pratt & Whitney, which made the engines on the jet, are aiding the investigation, experts say the engine failures were probably the result of foreign objects ingested after the fuselage blow-out.

Meanwhile, the Navy and Coast Guard almost doubled their search area to cover 3,000 square miles of the Pacific.

A Coast Guard cutter recovered "what appeared to be part of the fuselage" Friday night, spokesman Spangler said. The 4-by-6-foot piece of metal was turned over to investigators, along with several smaller pieces of debris. A Navy helicopter reported spotting what appeared to be a luggage rack Saturday morning.

Searchers speculated that large pieces of debris probably sank in the 15,000-foot-deep ocean.

Spangler said three helicopters, two planes and four vessels would continue combing the sea until nightfall, then decide whether to resume at daybreak.

Hospitals in Honolulu reported treating 27 people, mostly for minor injuries. Five remained hospitalized Saturday.

"We're really excited," said Donna Suhr, South Central Head Start's director.

In choosing which families are accepted into the program and which must be turned away each year, income is the only factor.

"We go down the list until the center's full. It's really hard," Suhr said. "We have so many on the waiting list that are in such need of services."

Suhr said in some years the local waiting list has been twice long as the enrollment list.

"It's especially difficult when the next child in line for acceptance was referred to the program by a physician," Suhr said. "And there are always tears."

Suhr estimates the local program serves only one-third of the eligible 4-year-olds in the Magic Valley. About 10 percent of those served have some sort of handicap, she said.

Nationally, Head Start served only 18.5 percent of 1987's eligible children. According to the Children's Defense Fund, 13 million, or one in five, American children live in poverty.

Most Head Start programs in Idaho have cut back on the number of kids they serve, as advised by national officials, because funding does not adequately cover the cost per child, Suhr said.

The government pays South Central Head Start $2,500 per child. Suhr said the figure should be at least $3,000.

"But we certainly don't want to whine," she said.

Both the Reagan and Carter administrations were good to Head Start, Suhr said, especially when there have been so many cutbacks in social programs in the past decade.

She said the program has been receiving a regular increase each year – it's been right around the 1 percent level – but that Bush's budget proposal shows that people realize Head Start's potential.

Researchers have found that Head Start alumni are more likely to graduate from high school than their counterparts, 65 percent vs. 52 percent. They also are less likely to repeat a grade or be assigned to special eduction classes, get into trouble with the law or get pregnant during their teen years. Graduates are also more likely to attend college, according to Newsweek magazine.

Every $1 spent on Head Start saves taxpayers $6 down the road in welfare and criminal justice costs and for special educational programs, Suhr said.

"Sometimes when you look at the defense budget and then you see that Head Start's getting an increase less than half of inflation," Suhr said, pausing and tilting her head in thought.

"But at the same time you're thankful for what you do get."

One local Head Start success story is the Hanchey family of Kimberly. Penny Hanchey, 17, was in Head Start in 1975; now she's president of her senior class and head cheerleader, and her name is a regular feature on the honor roll.

Her mother, Twila Hanchey, says her own involvement with the program helped build her self-esteem; now she works as the local Head Start health coordinator.

National Head Start officials will decide whether to stick with Bush's wish to expand the program to more children or to use the proposed increase in funding to improve the programs that already exist.

Suhr said she would like to see Head Start's school year extended so the kids get more learning time. She does not favor extending the hours the kids are in class, because they wouldn't learn any more.

"If we had full day, every day, we'd become a child care."

Suggestions have been made that the windfall be used to increase salaries – salaries described as "embarrassing" by Suhr.

"Many of our family educators are single heads of households who are on food stamps," Suhr said. "It just drives me crazy not to be able to pay them what they're worth."

She said most family educators – who teach the kids and make home visits to work with parents – earn $5 to $6 an hour. They work only 32 hours each week because of tight funding.

Some local aides are paid $4.26 an hour.

Bush's proposed budget is just starting the long process that leads to approval. Budget guidelines are required by mid-April, but approval could come as late as next fall.

Latest disaster came as new maintenance standards were to be proposed for old airliners

WASHINGTON (AP) — The explosive ripping open of United Air Lines' oldest Boeing 747 over the Pacific Ocean came as an air safety task force was about to propose mandatory work on all aging Boeing airliners.

Investigators consider structural failure a likely cause — although a mechanical problem, human error or sabotage have not been ruled out — for the incident Friday in which nine passengers died.

No matter the cause, the geriatric jumbo jet sitting on the tarmac at Hickam Air Force Base in Honolulu with a 10-by-40-foot hole in its side provided a graphic new illustration of continuing concern over the safety of commercial aviation.

Two days before the harrowing sky drama, the head of Boeing, F. A. Shrontz, had declared in a speech: "We believe fundamentally that with proper maintenance and proper inspection an airplane can in fact last forever."

Shrontz added, however, that "at some point economics catch up and the cost of inspection and the cost of updating just overwhelm the equation."

Boeing and United officials stressed the "heroic" effort of the pilot in bringing Flight 811 safely in with the remaining 345 people aboard and the stability of the aircraft in holding together as it returned to Honolulu for an emergency landing.

But the incident raised questions about conditions that would allow such a gaping hole to open up in the side of an airliner and the integrity of all older airliners — questions addressed by the Aging Aircraft Task Force set up by the Air Transport Association.

Even before the Flight 811 tragedy, the task force had scheduled a news conference here Tuesday to make recommendations that are expected to include mandatory repairs, modifications and replacements of parts on older Boeing 747s, 737s and 727s. Recommendations on airliners built by other manufacturers are to come later this year.

The Federal Aviation Administration, which is represented on the task force, would have to take action before the proposals would become binding.

Although the transport association represents airlines, the 150-member task force includes U.S. and European aviation experts and government regulatory officials as well as representatives of airliner manufacturers and professional mechanics organizations.

Mandatory updating of airliners could be a costly departure from the regime of inspection-related work the FAA now requires. It also could increase the pressure on airlines to get rid of their most-used aircraft if the changes send the cost of maintaining an old aircraft beyond that of purchasing a new one.

Aviation analyst Paul Turk of the appraisal firm of Avmark says only about 15 old airliners have been voluntarily sent to the scrap heap by major U.S. airlines in the last decade. Others have received complete overhauls, often including new engines, and been sold to charter outfits, cargo haulers or for other uses.

In recent years, with air travel increasing worldwide, the value of even older airliners has increased like the value of real estate. The airline industry is now a major attraction for investors.

Average age of airline fleets:

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are some average ages of airline fleets from data compiled in January by Avmark Inc., an appraisal and consulting company that keeps track of the world's airliners.

The figures are based on the age of the fleets as of July 1, 1988. Avintion experts say that more than chronological age, the safety and value of an airliner is determined by the quality of maintenance and the number of flying cycles, or takeoffs and landings, and other factors in its individual history.

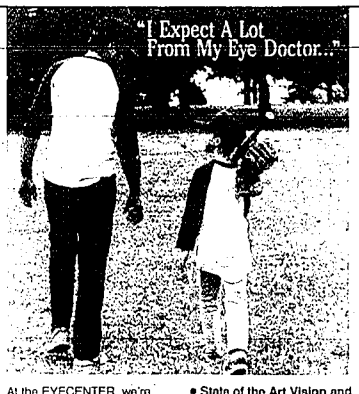

The average age of all U.S. jetliners with major carriers is 12.67 years and the average age of the worldwide fleet of more than 8,800 airliners is 13.1 years.

Scientists localize center of anxiety

WASHINGTON (AP) — That anxiety and fear you feel when the dentist says "open up," or a police officer behind you turns on his red light, triggers a reaction in the brain that has been measured for the first time by scientists at Washington University in Saint Louis.

The researchers tricked eight volunteers into a fearful anticipation of pain from an electrical shock and then measured the blood flow in their brains. The results for the first time established the specific location of an emotion in the brain. Dr. Eric Reiman of Washington University said Friday that eight volunteers, monitored by positron emission tomography (PET), were told they would receive a painful shock.

GREAT AMERICAN SNACKERS
Americans nibble the equivalent of a fourth meal a day, according to the Nutri/System Health & Fitness Information Bureau. A survey conducted by MRCA Information Services, a marketing research company in Stamford, CT, revealed that 80 billion snacks were consumed in 1986. Other findings showed beverages comprise 36% of between meal indulgences and sweets make up another 30%. "Healthy" snacks account for only 16% and are favored by adults over 65. Oddly enough, singles between 18 and 24 snack the least, while three - or - four - member households snack the most.

Craters should remain National Monument

Early this week, perhaps tomorrow, a study report by the National Park Service will make a recommendation on whether the Craters of the Moon National Monument should be expanded and upgraded to become the nation's 50th national park.

The evidence on the question is, at best, mixed, but to our way of thinking, there are serious questions about whether "park status" is the right way to go at this time.

Now we know this conclusion is not in line with the wishes of local economic boosters, primarily in the eastern end of the Magic Valley, who have long dreamed of what could be done with the vast Great Rift area north of the Snake River to help boost local economic development.

One long-simmering plan has been to build a decent road from Minidoka, across the Rift, to Arco.

Such a road would allow good access from the Burley-Rupert area to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, thereby improving eastern valley opportunities to get in on the federal employment and vendor developments which INEL offers.

Not coincidentally, such a cross-Rift road is thus on proposed maps for how the area should be developed if it were to gain national park status. Indeed, Sen. James McClure says the desire to "get a road built" is behind much of the effort to change Craters' status.

But the goal of local economic development, laudable as it may be in its own right, is not the only consideration in the Craters issue. Several other factors, it seems to us, may well tip the scale against the designation. Consider the following:

–Uniqueness. Yes, it is true that the current Craters Monument site is a unique site, but would expanding it enormously to take in the Great Rift area enhance that uniqueness in any real way?

Another way of looking at this is by asking what a national park is designed to protect. Among the important criteria are the diversity of the ecosystem, fragility of the natural environment and importance to the national heritage of wild lands. Can the Craters proposal meet those tests?

–Cost. Creating a Craters National Park is not simply a matter of putting up new signs. Roads must be built, as well as facilities, information centers and interpretive displays. All must be staffed.

To meet these costs at a time when other National Parks are stretched to the limit strikes us as, at best, difficult.

–Alternative designations. Over the decades, Congress has created a number of alternative designations for places of interest in the country which do not meet the rigorous standard for a park of singular uniqueness.

National monuments include points of unique geologic interest, which is what the Craters Monument clearly is.

Other special designations are National Seashores, National Recreation Areas, National Reserves, of which the City of Rocks is a newly-established local example.

Perhaps a case can be made that expanding the Craters monument to include Great Rift locations such as ice caves and the dominant volcanic buttes would enhance the diversity of the new site enough to merit park status.

But unless that strong case can be made for the change which goes beyond the desire for a cross-Rift road to INEL, we think the designation of the Craters of the Moon as a National Monument is probably the right designation at this time.

Hirohito ritual marks a turning point

David Williams

Emperor Hirohito's death on Jan. 7 and his burial on Friday represent key chapters in an unfolding national drama — and the stakes include survival of Japan as a political demperacy.

We Americans have had a poorly perceived but genuine role in this drama, based on U.S. insistence that Japan re-arm (what Washington cheerfully refers to as "burden sharing"). The "slippery slope" argument is as old as the postwar "MacArthur" constitution: Rearming will lead to resurgent nationalism and fierce nationalism will lead to the death of democracy. Many American critics have dismissed the argument as an idle left-wing obsession but the anti-conservative opposition in Japan already feels that it is dying the death of a thousand cuts.

The most sensitive battle of all has been over what place the emperor — once the supreme focus of nationalism — is to occupy in the self-definition of the Japanese people. How the late emperor died, how his passing was received by the nation and how the new emperor articulates his constitutional function has been testing Japan's posture as no other event could.

The Japanese man-in-the-street has been the object of this struggle, rarely an actor in it. The real battle has been between elites over what message, what image, what interpretation was to be transmitted to the public.

Often covert and subtle, this contest for the hearts and minds of a nation has been the central story of the last nerve-racking five months, leaving Japanese reporters exhausted.

Part of the exhaustion was caused by fear. Reporting on the imperial institution is a nightmare of linguistic snares, social taboos and interpretational bear-traps. When a Japanese editor at the English-language Mainichi Daily News accidentally ran his newspaper's carefully prepared obituary before the emperor died, the man lost his job and his boss was demoted.

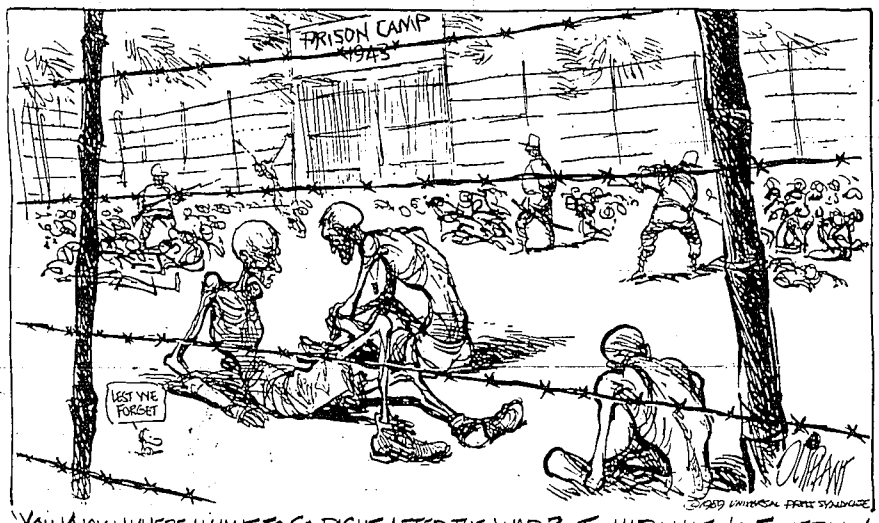

The mistake was partly a consequence of automated printing, but this was no excuse. To speak of the emperor's passing before the fact was inauspicious in the extreme. Especially on the right wing of Japanese political opinion, many thought that the president of Mainichi Shimbun, the huge parent of the Mainichi Daily News, should have resigned as well.

On two consecutive days, the Mainichi Daily ran a front-page apology; the earlier piece, labelled an "extremely grave error," was "cancelled" and "retracted." Notice of the firing and demotion were given prominent play in the unambiguous hope that such sacrifices would ward off social censure. And right-wing violence.

Such fears are not the product of overworked journalistic imagination. The Asahi Shimbun, Japan's second largest daily, has repeatedly had its offices around the country bombed. In 1987, there was a rifle assault on the newspaper's branch in Hyogo Prefecture.

These anonymous attacks on the most conspicuous defender of Japan's postwar settlement and constitution are almost certainly the work of one

'YOU KNOW WHERE I WANT TO GO RIGHT AFTER THE WAR? TO HIROHITO'S FUNERAL.'

Haynes Johnson

WASHINGTON — In Tokyo, the greatest assemblage of world leaders — larger even than the one for John F. Kennedy's funeral — has paid last respects to Emperor Hirohito of Japan. In the gathering, of course, was President Bush.

State funerals are, by definition, symbolic affairs. None in modern times, and perhaps none in this century, has been so rich in symbolism and historical irony as that of Hirohito, especially in reference to the United States.

Just 44 years ago, Japan was in ruins, impoverished and desolate, its dreams of empire crushed by the overwhelming power of the United States. At that moment, the United States, conqueror and ruler of Japan, fully emerged as the world's preeminent superpower.

Now, the roles have been reversed. Japan has managed history's most spectacular comeback. It stands today as the newest superpower and moves rapidly to claim the position as the most technologically advanced nation. Japan is among the world's most affluent nations and its leading creditor. Its horizons appear unlimited.

The United States, if not in actual decline, is facing hard questions about its future, none more difficult than that of dealing with its relations with Japan. Once the leading creditor, the United States has become the world's leading debtor. In many areas, its present situation compares unfavorably with its erstwhile vanquished foe. Prominent are the following:

•With half the population, Japan produces twice as many scientists and engineers as does the United States.

•While the U.S. savings rate has fallen sharply in the last decade, Japan's continues to increase and now is twice that of the United States.

•In terms of annual economic growth, as measured by gross national product statistics, Japan's growth rate is now three times as large.

•The U.S. collective debt has multiplied, making it more difficult to compete in world markets. Japan's exports have increased accordingly. Its penetration of the American economy through a range of manufactured goods has been profound, and Japan now exports to the United States nearly three times what it buys from America.

•Finally, a point made often in recent years but inexplicably without real political impact in presidential elections: Japan has succeeded in buying large segments of this country through direct investments in American companies, banks, real estate. Its direct investment in the United States, according to official estimates, exceeds $33 billion and is increasing.

All of these are reasons enough to ponder the comment of economist Lester Thurow, cited in Newsweek's report on Japan this week. "At the rate things are going," Thurow said, "we are all going to wind up working for the Japanese."

There were other obvious ironies connected with the funeral services telecast throughout the world. There was Bush, in office barely a month and an aviator shot down as a youth in the Pacific by Japanese planes. He may be the last of the World War II generation to rise to the top of American political leadership. Now he has paid tribute to the monarch whose 62-year reign was the longest of the century's major historical figures. Hirohito's time on the world stage far outlasted that of Lenin, Stalin, Churchill, Roosevelt,

Expedite Tower confirmation

As most everyone of y'all know, old Ted doesn't get hung up on the G.O.P. side of the fence very often and when he does he starts lookin for an open gate.

So come on now, let's either confirm George's boy to that big government job or turn the poor little critter back to the pasture; there ain't a lot of sense in dragging him around the corral anymore.

Now it seems to me that the man has suffered 'bout as much as he can stand, him being from Texas and all. Don't you know, here y'all are a man from Texas where everything grows big and your name is Tower, and a $250 Tony Lama boots you only stand a little over five feet tall. Now folks that's sufferin'.

Wor se yet, some dirty little creep years ago up in Austin leaked word to the press that at the senator's christening great-aunt Letisha Hoad had wanted to christen the new infant Eifel. God how awful!

Now this word "womanizing" is a mite worrisome to me. In plain old Murtaugh lingo, does this mean the same as horsin around, if so then what's all the fuss about?

Hell- afire, I'll wager that 90 percent of them stalwart senatorial stallions haven't confined all their forays to one paddock, since leaving their home-town stable.

As for drinkin, hey let's leave the little fellow some pride. Can't you just see him sipping up over the edge of a bar and a line for a double malted with a dollop of whapped cream?

Short a spell ago, Lady Bird (the wife of great one fer aphantin and adiggin) asked the Senator to preside at an Arbor Day doins down in Uvalde; turned to be a disaster! Hells afire, them baby pecan trees they was asettin out were bigger than the guest of honor.

Anyways, let's let him have his Jack Daniels and so what iffen he wants to tipple? With him being short and all he ain't got so far to topple!

Just now had aheckuva thought, what iffen his mama had of named him with the same first and middle names that my mama did me, namely Ted Victor? Then thet worrisome rascal would have been known far and wide as T.V. Tower. GOTCHA!

Help the watch-dog groups

In response to the Feb. 21 letter of David Vreeland — I almost laughed when I read this letter. Why? Because I had said almost the same thing the night before only my wording was, "I am tired of being 'jerked' around by the DOE/INEL."

Ironically, I have a list of "facts," too. I have read a lot about radiation/nuclear energy, both pro and con. I have also formed an opinion, except mine is that INEL's priority needs to be clean up of existing contamination and making it impossible for the Snake River Aquifer to become radioactive in generations to come.

1. Strength comes from a healthy economy and a healthy population. Build those and you really have something.

2. If you think that the world has been at peace since the bombing of Japan, you must live in a very small world indeed.

3. Our arsenal of 25,000 nuclear weapons is enough to destroy the world many, many times over. This is reality, not an elephant. Demonstrate to me that we need even one more warhead. Demonstrate to me, a taxpayer, that even one more dime needs to be spend on the arms race.

With a national debt that has tripled in the last eight years, the Department of Energy has not been able to demonstrate that more dollars need to be spent in this area. On the other hand, 6 million cubic feet of radioactive waste buried and sitting above our Snake River Aquifer is a good place to start spending money for research and defense of life.

4. Nuclear power is neither safe, clean, nor cheap. Chernobyl and Three Mile Island bear witness to this.

5. No scientific evidence is available because no health studies have been done. That's why Governor Andrus asked that health studies be done.

6. Injection waste is less radioactive than human blood? May I see this data? The injection well at INEL released 70,000 curies of radioactivity while in use. (Dept. of Energy data)

7. Cancer studies show that as an "average" Idaho is a safer place to live than most. Not shown are specific areas where cancer "clusters" exist.

8. INEL provides jobs for Idaho. So does farming, ranching, health care, food processing and business.

9. The Special Isotope Separator (SIS) is still in experimental stages. The technology has yet to be tested full-scale, so it cannot be assumed that it is safe.

10. In truth, nuclear research has affected our future. I would like to know more about how it has already affected mine. Unfortunately, when asked for that information the Department of Energy says it will cost $750,000 to release it. So much for the Freedom of Information Act.

Mr. Vreeland, if you are really concerned that citizens are forming opinions about the INEL without knowing the facts, maybe you could help us out and see if you can get these facts. Better yet, get Governor Andrus to help us get them.

I encourage you to, if not change your point of view, at least do some questioning. It's healthy to question! Any true scientist knows that. You might start with the SIS Environmental Impact Statement. There you may find yourself asking what kind of science it is that relies so heavily upon such words as "conservative amount," "insignificant amount," "slightly higher" and "conservative assumptions."

I am motivated to speak out because of my belief in the U.S. Constitution and the phrase "We The People." Nowhere in that blessed document does it allow scientists and so-called qualified people free reign to exploit the land, air and people.

I ask you to examine your motive for attacking watch-dog groups. Why would you silence those who work to bring balance to the nuclear issue?

Congress wrong, North right

To Senator James A. McClure:

I've been thinking of writing to you for sometime, but kept putting it off. Now some items have come up that I have to get off my mind.

One of the items is the "Boland Amendment," and the other is the awful deal on Ret. Col. Oliver North.

I don't know why you passed this "bill," because it makes people of the Western Hemisphere guerrillas and the communists the rightful residents. I can't understand how this "bill" got through, neither can a great number of others in Idaho.

It seems like anything the communists want, the communists get. What is going on? It looks like we are heading into a communist rule.

The four Marines over in Russia are fall guys, because they are accused of letting the Soviets in the U.S. Embassy. I understand it is so bugged that you can't go to the rest room without them knowing. You accuse these boys of wrong doing.

Congress should clean up a lot of "boo boos" of their own. All they have to do to find the one's in the wrong is look into a mirror.

The people around here don't like the way you are treating the colored; he is to most of us a "hero."

or more right-wing radical groups. The country has about 800 of them.

Where violence and physical intimidation are judged inappropriate, the radical right has other, more sophisticated tactics. When the Japanese version of Penthouse (published by Kodansha) ran a story claiming a sexual scandal in the imperial household, rightists brought pressure on advertisers. Eventually the magazine had to halt publication, but the final issue included a formal apology to the imperial family.

Then there is that most formidable weapon: the oversized speaker-car: Armed with as many as 20 separate speakers, these cars can make normal conversation impossible for 1,000 yards in any direction. Last year, the right mobilized more than 100 such vehicles to lay siege on the annual meeting of the Japan's Teachers' Union (Nikkyo-so), which is uncompromisingly opposed to any form of Japanese rearmament.

Since mid-September when the nation began what was in effect a deathwatch, speaker-cars have been conspicuous by their absence. The streets of Tokyo took on an eerie quiet as right-wing groups agreed that nothing should disturb the high solemnity of the Japanese nation in official mourning. Now that the emperor has been buried, a major demonstration of muscle by the country's 120,000 self-proclaimed rightists is confidently predicted.

The essence of action within the closed court of the imperial Japanese house is the symbolic gesture. The new occupant of the Chrysanthemum Throne made a revolutionary gesture in his first formal address by adding the honorific san in speaking of and to the Japanese people, something his father would have never dreamed of doing.

Another move also stunned Japanese conservatives: The new monarch used the occasion of his first address to come down firmly in favor of Japan's postwar constitution. Many conservatives object to the constitution's peace clause, its symbolic definition of the emperor and its foreign authorship.

The speech immediately raised two sensitive questions. Since the Imperial Household Agency no longer appears to attract the ablest civil servants and since the new emperor has yet to assemble his own group of top advisers, did he write the speech himself? Many Japanese commentators suspect that he did.

Second, and still more interesting, why did Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita approve the content of an address so obviously contrary to his party's traditional notions of imperial dignity and its opposition to the 1946 constitution?

One veteran Japanese journalist insists that former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone would never have accepted the address as written; only Takeshita's awe of the imperial institution and his own lack of clear ideological principles allowed the speech to be presented. Other well-informed sources say that the emperor would have had his way in any case.

The net result of last week's burial is mixed. The Japanese right can claim a major victory for intensive education in nationalist sentiment. Yet the new emperor's stance seems to confirm the view of those who argue that the modern Japanese imperial court has always looked in the right direction even if it sometimes found itself in the wrong.

Whispered speculation that the emperor's liberal stance makes him vulnerable to right-wing protests — or worse — remains just that: speculation. But there is no question that Japan has just experienced an extraordinary turning point. The test of a democratic society has so far been met, but it has been a close run. More important, the drama is not yet finished.

David Williams is an editorial writer for the Japan Times.

Hitler, Mao and lesser figures. It also encompassed the greatest shift in fortunes involving any two nations in that period.

In his lifetime, Hirohito presided over Japan's rise and fall — and then its rise again. He saw his small island nation survive the devastation of atomic war and loss of more than 3 million lives. Then, although Japan possessed nothing comparable to the natural resources of the United States and had a vastly smaller land mass and half the population, he watched it compete on equal terms and directly challenge the United States for world economic supremacy.

The lesson is simple. Japan accomplished this by demonstrating traits that, for generations, Americans most celebrated in themselves: hard work, perserverance, ingenuity, initiative, enterprise, appreciation of education and competition. Most of all, Japan has succeeded because it has not been content to stand still.

It is good that Bush went to Hirohito's funeral, a moment of both ceremonial and paramount historical significance. It would be even better if he studies the Japanese example and returns with renewed determination to stop the sense of drift and purposelessness that seem to have enveloped his new administration. He, and all Americans, have work to do.

Bookstores will display 'Satanic Verses'

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's biggest booksellers, stiffening their spines in the face of terrorist threats, have reversed themselves and declared they will display and sell "The Satanic Verses" after all.

With their statements, B. Dalton, Barnes & Noble and Waldenbooks sought to quell a furious protest over their initial moves to pull the book from their shelves when Iran threatened death to its author and handlers.

But it took a statement from President Bush and pleas from their own employees for the chains to budge. In the end, their discomfiture made for an awkward and painful drama in which the shadow of terrorism fell over an unlikely setting, the local bookstore.

"The decision all along has been one of safety. Whether or not to stand on the front lines against terrorism was not a decision Waldenbooks wanted to make on behalf of its 8,500 employees," said spokesman Trace Urdan.

Critics said more than safety was at stake. After initial hesitation, writers held rallies and readings to support author Salman Rushdie and to denounce the bookstore chains for abandoning the freedom of expression.

"Rushdie the individual yields place to Rushdie the symbol of our freedom to write and to publish what we want," said author Diana Trilling.

Police drop charges against 88-year-old

MIAMI (AP) — A prosecutor has dropped assault charges against an 88-year-old woman accused of trying to hit a police officer with a crowbar while two of her grandsons were being arrested.

"We thought it would not be possible to prove that an 88-year-old lady had the ability to carry out an aggravated assault in that circumstance," Dade County State Attorney Janet Reno said Thursday.

Zessie Tucker's grandsons still face prosecution for allegedly interfering with an undercover officer during a Sunday night drug arrest, police said.

Police subsequently explained they meant her no disrespect despite claims by black community leaders that her arrest was unnecessary and smacked of racism.

"We feel compassion for Ms. Tucker," said Lt. John Brooks, head of the street narcotics unit. "We don't feel animosity.

"I considered un-arresting her on the scene. But we were placed in a situation there, and we did what we had to do at the time. There were people who were hostile out there."

Ms. Tucker, who denied threatening anyone with a crowbar, was taken Sunday night to the Dade County Jail and released on $1,500 bond a short time later.

Police said one of Ms. Tucker's grandsons tried to block the capture of a drug suspect by grabbing a plain-clothes officer who ran through the family's back yard. They said Ms. Tucker came after them with the crowbar as they were arresting the grandsons, Rudolph and Paul Gibson.

But eyewitnesses said Ms. Tucker came out to protect her grandsons when police at the scene — allegedly upset over onlookers' protests at their treatment of the unidentified drug suspect — began hitting the Gibson brothers.

Brooks said the grandsons have been charged with battery on a police officer, resisting arrest and obstruction of justice.

Lawmakers call for cease-fire in Sudan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eleven members of Congress appealed Saturday for a cease-fire in Sudan's civil war so that food aid and other humanitarian relief efforts can be expedited.

The action followed testimony at a Senate hearing Thursday indicating that hundreds of thousands of civilians may die this year unless shipments of food and medicine are allowed to reach needy Sudanese before the onset of the rainy season weeks from now makes shipments difficult or impossible.

The lawmakers voiced their appeal in telegrams sent to Sudanese Prime Minister Sadiq al-Mahdi and Col. John Garang, leader of the rebel Sudanese People's Liberation Movement.

"We call upon both parties to the war to adopt an immediate temporary cease-fire to facilitate the delivery of food and other humanitarian relief until the rainy season begins," the messages said.

Recent Medicare changes mean increased taxes for seniors

WASHINGTON—While President Reagan's signing of the Medicare Catastrophic Loss Protection Act last July will provide additional health coverage, it also will mean more in taxes for the approximately 32 million Medicare enrollees. The increased benefits will be funded by a surtax levied against all "Medicare-eligible" individuals whose tax liability exceeds $150. Generally, this means anyone who is 65 or older and entitled to receive Medicare benefits—whether or not they actually receive or apply for them. Called a "supplemental premium," this new surtax will begin in the 1989 tax year. It will amount to $22.50 for every $150 of federal income tax liability, with a ceiling of $800 per person. By 1993, the premium will nearly double (see chart). The new surtax is based on the actual income tax paid, not one's taxable income.

Year	Premium Rate Per $150 of Tax Liability	Max. Amount Per Person
1990	37.50	850
1991	39.00	900
1992	40.50	950
1993	42.00	1,050

An example of how the new supplemental Medicare premium will be applied: A 65-year-old taxpayer who has a federal income tax liability of $4500 would pay an additional $675 in 1989 ($4500/150 x 22.50).

Reduce your liability with a Van Kampen Merritt tax-free investment.

If you're eligible for Medicare, the only way to decrease the amount of extra premium you'll have to pay is to lower your income tax liability. Van Kampen Merritt has prepared a most useful pamphlet about the new Medicare tax-on-tax. It includes a convenient work sheet that you can use to determine how much more in tax will come out of your pocket . . . unless you act now. Israelis vow revenge for soldier's death

JERUSALEM (AP) — A 6-year-old girl was in critical condition with head wounds after clashes with Israeli troops Saturday and the army chief vowed to avenge the death of a soldier killed when Arabs dropped a cement block on his head.

Arab doctors said Israeli troops fired rubber-coated steel pellets and live ammunition at Palestinian stone-throwers in Gaza's Rafah refugee camp, wounding a 20-year-old man and the girl, identified as Lulu Mahmoud Abu Dahi.

They said she had suffered a broken skull and was listed in critical condition.

The hospital officials reported seven other Palestinians wounded in clashes throughout the occupied territories.

An army official confirmed two wounded, including the 6-year-old girl, who he said was "badly wounded in the head" and transferred to Tel Hashomer Hospital near Tel Aviv.

In the West Bank city of Nablus, the army enforced a curfew and raided dozens of homes in search of Palestinians who killed Sgt. Binyamin Meisner on Friday by dropping a 33-pound cement block on him from a rooftop.

The army's chief of staff, Maj. Gen. Dan Shomron, vowed to step up army control over the occupied lands in response to the slaying of Meisner, 24, a reserve paratrooper. He was killed in the city's open air market.

"There is no doubt we will respond in this area ... and the price will be heavy," Shomron said during a tour of Nablus, the West Bank's largest city with 120,000 residents.

Egypt, Israel near end of border dispute

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Foreign Ministry official said Saturday the Egyptian-Israeli border dispute over the Red Sea resort of Taba likely is to be settled this week, ending a quarrel that has marred bilateral relations for seven years.

Under a tentative agreement, Israel would return Taba to Egypt, but Israelis would be allowed to visit the 250-acre resort without visas or special entry fees.

The package still needs approval of the Israeli Cabinet, which is due to vote on it today. Egyptian and Israeli delegates will meet in Taba to work out the final details of the package.

"If it goes quickly, we will be able to sign Sunday night," said Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Liel.

Once the agreement is signed, Israel will withdraw from Taba within two weeks.

Taba also is the site of a luxury hotel and a holiday village, but negotiations over the future of the two facilities are being conducted separately between the owners and the Egyptian Tourism Ministry.

Previous reports said the hotel owner was to receive $40 million from Egypt for the property, but Liel said no final agreement has been reached.

Moslems reportedly being trained to kill Rushdie

LONDON (AP) — A Middle Eastern diplomat said Saturday pro-Iranian Moslems were receiving terrorist training in at least five places in England, so authorities should take seriously Iran's death threat against novelist Salman Rushdie.

The senior diplomat in London told The Associated Press that Islamic cultural centers in Bradford, Leicester and Manchester and at least two in London were bases for Iranian and Lebanese members of Hezbollah, or Party of God, a pro-Iranian extremist group.

Hezbollah members are training British-based Moslems to use weapons and make bombs, said the diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He said Britain's MI5 counter-espionage organization and Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist unit were aware of the terrorist training. Scotland Yard would not comment.

Rushdie, born into a Moslem family in India, is a British citizen and lives in London.

He has been in hiding since Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini told Moslem zealots on Feb. 14 he should die for his book "The Satanic Verses."

Many Moslems believe "The Satanic Verses" insults Islam.

In Lebanon on Saturday, the leader of a group allied with Hezbollah called on Moslems in Britain to kill the 41-year-old author.

Hussein Musawi, head of Islamic Amal, told Shiite Moslems in the city of Baalbek: "We have to take the initiative and speed up taking part in Rushdie's execution."

ON YOUR FEET

DR. DAVID BLACKMER
PODIATRIST

THE FOOT AS A MIRROR

When the foot specialist looks at your feet, it's like looking into a "mirror of health." Not only can he see signs of foot discomfort, but if there are other problems he may notice those, too.

Dry skin, brittle nails, and any numbness or discoloration in the feet are signals that there may be serious health problems. These are some of the early signs of such conditions as diabetes, arthritis, and circulatory disease.

That's why preventive foot care is so important. It can put a stop to aches and pains in your feet. And if structural defects in your feet are causing other problems, such as pain in your hips and back, these can often be helped, too. Through a complete examination of your feet, using x-rays and other laboratory procedures, your podiatrist may discover other problems and refer you to another medical specialist.

Foot comfort is important to your health. And when there are serious problems, prompt treatment is your best hope. That's why periodic foot examinations should be one of your top priorities.

WHEN CAT MATE COMES HOME

QUESTION: One of my two cats recently returned from the animal hospital. My other cat, a normally well-behaved male either ignored her or hissed at her for the first four days after she came home. Can this behavior be prevented?

ANSWER: I don't know of any way to prevent this behavior and, frankly, it is not unusual in cats. Because the returning cat has picked up unfamiliar odors from the hospital, the cat that remained home did not recognize her as the companion that shares his territory; instead he views her as a stranger from whom he must protect his turf.

It is important not to force the animals to stay together when first reintroduced. Make sure the returning cat can hide or escape.

Ex-senator Norris Cotton dies

LEBANON, N.H. (AP) — Former Sen. Norris Cotton, who earned a reputation as a laconic, fiercely independent and conscientious Yankee statesman in three decades in Congress, has died of pneumonia at age 88.

Cotton, who called himself a "rock-ribbed conservative and proud of it," died Friday at his home, said Jane Bassick, a spokeswoman for Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center in Hanover.

"He embodied the substance and character of the state and people he served for so many years," said Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H. "The death of Norris Cotton marks the passage of a grent New Hampshire statesman and the end of an era."

Gov. Judd Gregg ordered state flags lowered to half-staff in memory of Cotton, who he said "represented the best of Yankee statesmanship."

Former President Nixon called Cotton "one of my closest friends in Washington" in a statement issued from his home in Saddle Brook, N.J.

Cotton and Nixon became friends when both were sworn in as freshman representatives in 1946.

Cotton went to the Senate in 1954 after winning an election to fill the two remaining years of the late Sen. Charles Tobey's term.

On Aug. 4, 1974, the day Nixon resigned the presidency, Cotton was among those the president phoned to say goodbye.

"It was the saddest day of my life," Cotton recalled. But he said he was relieved Nixon had quit.

Polls show Mondale would win

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Former Vice President Walter Mondale hasn't decided whether to run against Sen. Rudy Boschwitz in 1990, but Minnesotans give him a good chance of defeating the incumbent, a survey released today shows.

The poll, conducted by the Minneapolis Star Tribune on Feb. 15-20, found 49 percent of the 701 Minnesota adults surveyed believed Mondale would defeat Boschwitz in a head-to-head race. Forty percent said they thought Boschwitz would win.

Spokesmen for both men described the results as "interesting."

"It's too early for these numbers to be very meaningful," said Mondale's son, Ted, who has been urging his father to run.

Boschwitz's campaign director, Tom Mason, said the poll "confirms what everybody thinks. It would be a close, competitive race."

Mondale, who ran unsuccessfully for president in 1984, has said repeatedly that he does not intend to run for office again. He now works as a lawyer in Minneapolis.

Mondale has led Boschwitz in every published poll in the last 18 months.

An August 1987 poll of 757 Minnesota adults showed Mondale leading Boschwitz by 15 percentage points.

The latest poll, for which no margin of error was cited, showed a slight erosion in Boschwitz's job-approval rating.

Newman's racing keeps life 'off balance'

NEW YORK (AP) — Paul Newman is 64, looks about 44 and says his secret is doing what most men dream of when they're about 14.

"To be behind the wheel of a car doing over 100 mph is one of the most exhilarating things I know," the actor said in the spring 1989 issue of Men's Health. "Racing is a way of being a happy child again."

Newman races sports cars about six months a year. When he isn't doing that or acting, he's running Newman's Own Inc., a $40 million-a-year food business.

What does he say to those who argue that a 64-year-old actor driving race cars is unbalanced?

"You have to keep things off balance or it's all over," he said.

Former kidnap victim prepares for miniseries

MERCED, Calif. (AP) — Steven Stayner is steeling himself for the inevitable return of the reporters when a television miniseries airs about his seven years as a childhood kidnapping victim.

"I just want to get it over with," Stayner said recently. "As soon as the movie comes out, the reporters will come back. It will never go away."

Stayner, now 23, was snatched from a street in this central California farming community on Dec. 4, 1972, when he was 7.

More than seven years later, his case suddenly became one of the most publicized kidnappings ever when he and another missing boy, 5-year-old Timothy White, walked into a police station in Ukiah, 150 miles north of Merced.

A drifter, Kenneth Parnell, was later convicted of kidnapping and spent five years in prison.

"I don't mind talking about the movie," said Stayner. Referring to his kidnapping, he said, "It was a terrible experience, but let's not get overdramatic about it."

Prince speaks out on rain forests, debt crisis

PUERTO AYACUCHO, Venezuela (AP) — Britain's Prince Charles marched into a steaming Amazon rain forest to demonstrate that an international approach is needed to solve environmental problems.

"Rain forests in this part of the world are in essence the lungs of the world and need to be protected," the prince said, adding that all countries need to learn from primitive societies how to live with nature without destroying it.

The prince, on a three-day trip to Venezuela, flew from Caracas to Puerto Ayacucho, a small town on the Orinoco River, and then drove off to a rain forest Friday that is home to a tiny community of Piaroa indians.

There, the prince sampled a variety of exotic tropical fruits and marched along a narrow trail. The heir to the British throne also declared that solving the world debt crisis may entail great sacrifice by developed countries.

Louise Mandrell buys piano played with feet

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Louise Mandrell has purchased a "walking piano" like the one actor Tom Hanks played in the movie "Big," and plans to play it at her concerts.

Jeannie Ghent, a spokeswoman for the country music performer, said Friday that Miss Mandrell bought the 14-foot instrument a month ago at a New York City toy store for $15,000.

Maine's governor, congresswoman exchange marriage vows

Gov. McKernan, Olympia Snowe will honeymoon in New York City

LEWISTON, Maine (AP) — Maine's governor, John R. McKernan, and its only congresswoman, Olympia J. Snowe, exchanged marriage vows Friday in a private ceremony attended by about 100 friends and relatives.

"It was wonderful," Snowe said as the newlyweds chatted briefly with reporters outside the Greek Orthodox Church of the Holy Trinity. Snowe is of Greek descent.

"We walked around the table four times — we did it so well, we did it an extra time," McKernan said, jocularly referring to the ceremonial walk that is part of the traditional wedding ritual.

No governor and member of Congress have ever married while both were in office, according to records checked by The Associated Press.

The ceremony in Maine's second-largest city, adjacent to Snowe's hometown of Auburn, consummated a romance they have quietly maintained for a decade.

Uniformed and plainclothes state troopers guarded the couple's privacy at the entrance to the gray church on a suburban hilltop.

About two dozen reporters and photographers waited outside in freezing temperatures, although one still photographer and one TV photographer were allowed inside immediately at the conclusion of the ceremony.

"Wish it could be a little warmer for you," Snowe told reporters as she arrived promptly at 4 p.m.

The governor had arrived five minutes earlier. "Am I on time?" he asked.

The newlyweds planned to return to the Blaine House, the governor's mansion 30 miles from Lewiston, for a private reception for wedding guests Friday evening.

Later Friday night, weather permitting, they planned to fly on a friend's plane to New York City for a honeymoon weekend. After that, they will travel to Washington, where McKernan plans to attend a national governors conference and Snowe will tend to her congressional duties.

About 7,500 people have been invited to a March 4 reception at the Augusta Civic Center; the $10,000 tab will be covered by leftover funds from Snowe's last campaign.

At the Blaine House, the couple received cards by the hundreds and gifts by the dozen, according to the governor's social secretary, Sally Bartram.

Most of the gifts came from personal friends and family, but a few were received from strangers who were moved by news of the nuptials. One woman sent the governor a copy of a book that her husband had written before he died; a second woman sent McKernan three crocheted doilies.

"She just said she admires him," Bartram said.

McKernan, 40, was divorced from his first wife in 1978. Snowe, 42, was widowed in 1973 when her first husband was killed in a car crash. The governor has an 18-year-old son.

The two met as Republican members of the Maine House of Representatives and served together as the state's two representatives in the U.S. House in the early 1980s.

McKernan was elected governor in 1986 after two terms in Congress; Snowe is completing her sixth term in Congress.

Singer Hamblen receives get-well wishes

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Veteran country and gospel singer-composer Stuart Hamblen, suffering from a brain tumor, was in good spirits after receiving get-well calls from former President Reagan and others.

Those calling to wish the 82-year-old musician well included Reagan and such well-known singing movie cowboys as Gene Autry and Roy Rogers, said Arnhen Markarian, spokeswoman for St. John's Hospital and Medical Center.

Hamblen entered the hospital two weeks ago complaining of headaches, and the brain tumor was discovered following a battery of tests, said the musician's spokesman, Garth Hintz.

Doctors weren't expected to decide whether to operate until later this week, Markarian said. Hamblen was listed in fair condition Saturday.

Dizzy Gillespie loses travelers' checks

NEW YORK (AP) — American Express refused to replace Dizzy Gillespie's lost travelers' checks when the jazz idol could not produce identification.

Gillespie suggested company employees in Los Angeles call his lawyer, Elliot Hoffman, to verify his identity, the New York Post reported Saturday.

"What can we ask this man to prove he's really Dizzy Gillespie?" an employee was quoted as asking Hoffman.

"Ask him what comes after 'oo-bop-shabam,'" Hoffman suggested.

In the words of his classic, Gillespie shot back, "Afloogle-mop."

Gillespie, who was in Los Angeles to receive a Lifetime Achievement Grammy Award, got his checks.

Former Congressman files for bankruptcy

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Richard A. Tonry, the first congressman ever to go to prison for violating federal campaign finance laws, has filed for bankruptcy.

Tonry, who resigned from Congress six months after his 1976 election and was indicted less than two weeks later, refused to talk about the Chapter 7 proceedings filed Thursday to liquidate his assets.

Bankruptcy court records show that he went to bankruptcy court after creditors seized some of his property in the wake of a series of court judgments against him and others.

The records showed that Tonry, who was defeated in a state House race in 1983, claimed net income of $78,000 in 1987 and $70,000 in 1988.

The bankruptcy court filing apparently is the second for Tonry, who filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition in October 1980 in connection with business losses of two family owned companies dissolved earlier that year.

That petition listed debts of $4.6 million and assets of $2.6 million, but more than $2 million of the assets was money Tonry was seeking in lawsuits.

Randy Travis works out with Schwarzenegger

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Randy Travis, who worked out this week in California with Arnold Schwarzenegger, says the actor-body builder is a country music buff.

Travis, who has sold more than 6 million country music records in the past three years, said Schwarzenegger invited him for a workout in Los Angeles Wednesday morning before the Grammy awards presentation that night.

Travis and his manager, Lib Hatcher, also had lunch with Schwarzenegger and his wife, broadcast newswoman Maria Shriver.

"He's a big country music fan," Travis said. "Maria said that's all he listens to."

Travis won a Grammy Award for his recording, "Old 8x10."

Rev. Sharpton to serve 2-week jail sentence

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The Rev. Al Sharpton was sent to jail Saturday to serve a two-week sentence for obstructing traffic during an April 4 demonstration in support of a black teen-ager who claims she was assaulted by several white men.

Sharpton joined folk singer Pete Seeger, who was jailed Friday on similar charges in the same demonstration on behalf of Tawana Brawley.

"We weren't going to leave Pete up here by himself," Sharpton said after arriving at the Albany County Jail.

Sharpton and seven others were taken to jail following an arraignment at the Albany Police Court before judge Thomas Keegan. He will serve the last 14 days of a 15-day sentence.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall rejected the request of Sharpton, Seeger and the others for a stay of their sentences.

Miss Brawley, a black teen-ager formerly of Wappingers Falls, claimed she'd been sexually assaulted by a group of white men in November 1987. A state grand jury concluded she invented the story.

Soviet official in Tehran for visit with Khomeini

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze arrived in Tehran on Saturday for a rare audience with the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini that promises a thaw in long-strained relations between the neighbors.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency said Shevardnadze, the highest ranking Soviet official to visit Iran since the 1979 Islamic revolution, carried a message for Khomeini from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev. IRNA, monitored in Nicosia, gave no hint about the letter's contents.

Shevardnadze is on the final leg of a 10-day mission aimed at boosting Moscow's influence in the Middle East.

Shevardnadze has refused to say whether he will discuss with Khomeini the Iranian leader's death sentence on British novelist Salman Rushdie for allegedly blaspheming Islam in his book "The Satanic Verses."

West European countries have recalled their senior diplomats from Tehran in protest of the threat. Sources in London said Friday that Britain had asked Shevardnadze to press Iran to renounce its death threat.

Moscow was the main arms supplier to Iraq, Iran's enemy in the 8-year gulf war, and it withdrew thousands of technicians from Tehran when the fighting began.

Latin Americans wait to sneak into U.S.

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Central Americans who want political asylum in the United States, but know their chances are slim under a new policy, say they will wait in hiding in this border city until they can cross the Rio Grande and elude federal agents.

The number of Central Americans bothering to apply for asylum has plummeted since last week when the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service toughened its stance on political asylum applicants.

The INS reported it processed 233 asylum applications Tuesday, the first day of the get-tough procedure, and only 19 were processed Friday; over that period, three were granted asylum.

Border Patrol officials say the Central Americans are hiding wherever they can until they believe they can cross illegally into the United States.

"We think they're just lying low, maybe at hotels in Matamoros, with alien-smugglers or with sympathizers," said Silvestre Reyes, chief of the Border Patrol's McAllen sector.

At a Catholic Church-run shelter named Casa Juan Diego, dozens of Central Americans talked about why they fled their homelands and about their long, difficult journeys during which they were robbed and were forced to beg for rides and food.

They also asked about the new INS rules, under which asylum petitions can be denied in one day and the applicants then jailed pending deportation, and how difficult it would be to reach destinations like Los Angeles, Miami or New York.

"I don't know what we're going to do, but we'll find a way to cross, no matter what the cost is," said 21-year-old Nicaraguan Marta Salcedo, who arrived Monday with five other Nicaraguans.

"We don't want to go back to our own country. We'll be killed because we are viewed as counter-revolutionaries," she said. "We'll get to the other side somehow."

But U.S. Border Patrol agents in the Rio Grande Valley say getting past them is going to be tough. More than 125 agents have been sent to the district, bringing the total to 500. And they're all working 12-hour shifts.

Ms. Salcedo, whose father was an officer in the Anastasio Somoza regime that was overthrown by the leftist Sandinistas, fled with her family to Guatemala in September 1987 and began her journey to the United States earlier this month.

Fellow Nicaraguan Marina Espinoza and her three children said they were robbed by police near Mexico City. They want to go to Los Angeles to see the children's father, Vicente Espinoza, who filed for asylum after entering the country more than a year ago.

Filipinos mark 3rd anniversary of Aquino rule

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino pledged Saturday to unite the nation and begin "the ways of peace" as Filipinos marked the third anniversary of the popular uprising that brought her to power and toppled Ferdinand Marcos.

Several prominent Filipinos boycotted the celebrations because of disappointment with Mrs. Aquino. Police opened fire to drive off about 3,000 Marcos supporters demanding their leader's return from Hawaiian exile.

The military arrested three suspected right-wing extremists in a van filled with 30 cases of explosives outside the capital.

Mrs. Aquino, who returned Saturday from the funeral of Japan's Emperor Hirohito, said President Bush and other international leaders "told me that they admire us Filipinos for that non-violent revolution."

She made her comments following a Roman Catholic Mass along Epifanio delos Santos Avenue, where hundreds of thousands of civilians turned out three years ago to protect soldiers who mutinied against Marcos.

Police estimated Saturday's crowd at 30,000, smaller than the last two anniversaries.

"I think it is up to the leaders of your country to initiate the ways of peace," Mrs. Aquino told the crowd. "I hope you will be patient with us because we are in a transition period. I promise that this day, we will unite and do a better job in serving you."

Cardinal Jaime L. Sin said before Mrs. Aquino's speech that corruption and political bickering were diverting attention from eradicating poverty and social injustice.

"The old politics have come back to the dismay of us all — positioning for power, the corruption, the grandstanding, the influence-peddling, the petty bickering," he said.

Shooting erupted at a separate rally in Manila by about 3,000 Marcos loyalists, who demanded Marcos be allowed to return from Honolulu, where he has been exiled since his 20-year rule ended Feb. 25, 1986.

Indonesia explosion at warehouse kills 2

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — At least two people died and five were seriously injured when an air force ammunition warehouse exploded, the official Antara news agency said Saturday.

The explosion Thursday at Jatigiembol village was caused by embers of a fire that had been used earlier to destroy old ammunition, Antara said, quoting air force sources.

The blast occurred about 500 miles east of Jakarta.

Antara said seven people, including two air force personnel, were injured and two victims died later in a hospital. The others were hospitalized in serious condition.

Craters of the Moon

Stallings vows to continue battle for national park status

By The Associated Press
and States News Service

WASHINGTON — Rep. Richard Stallings is not discouraged by a preliminary Interior Department report that recommends the Craters of the Moon not be granted national park status, but instead be made a national science reserve.

That recommendation was by a regional Interior official to National Park Service Director William Penn Mott in Washington, D.C.

Stallings said he will propose legislation this year to make the Craters area a national park, regardless of Interior's recommendation, and try to pass it in 1990.

"I'm excited about it," Stallings said. "They sent us a preliminary report in which they did not necessarily endorse national park status, but they did identify some very high qualities of the place and came up with a classification (as a national science reserve) I had never heard of before."

Part of a vast lava formation that covers hundreds of miles on the Snake River plain, the Craters of the Moon has been a national monument since 1924. Its 83 square miles of dark lava crags and domes north of the Mini-Cassia area provide a rugged habitat for many kinds of plant and wildlife.

Stallings and a group of Mini-Cassia residents have proposed the monument become Idaho's first national park. It would be in three sections to encompass the natural features of the area, including Craters, Big Southern Butte and Crystal Ice Caves.

Unlike many neighboring states, Idaho lacks the potent tourist attraction that a national park provides. By classifying the craters in the same league with the Grand Tetons and Yellowstone National Park, Idaho could net many of the travelers to those sites, said Cary Jones, legislative aide to Stallings.

"We think it would be nice for Idaho to get a national park in its Centennial year," said Melodie Rydalch, another Stallings aide.

Sen. Jim McClure, R-Idaho, has said the state does not "have a ghost of a chance of getting a law passed" if the Park Service report did not favor national park status.

Stallings acknowledged that some people consider the Interior report crucial in deciding whether to grant the park status.

But he does not think the report is necessarily decisive, and that Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn., chairman of the House National Parks and Public Lands subcommittee, agrees.

"Congress makes that final determination," Stallings said. "We've set the goal to make that part of our Centennial. There are 49 national parks right now, and this would be the 50th park and Idaho's 100th birthday celebration."

A park has to be unique in geography and reflect some characteristic found no where else. It also must be accessible. Stallings said the Craters area meets those requirements.

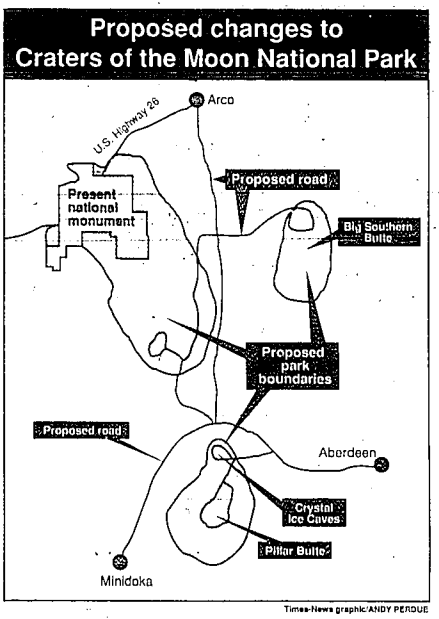

A spokesman for the Park Service's northwestern division in Seattle said last week Craters might not provide the variety of scenic and historic features necessary to win the coveted classification.

"It certainly doesn't have the variety (of outstanding features) that Glacier or Yellowstone or Yosemite has," said Ivan Miller, planning chief of the northwest region."But that's strictly an opinion.

"National park criteria is different from national monument criteria," he explained. A site must "have nationally significant resources, something that makes economic sense to manage" to be a national park.

The change in designation would not mean a substantial change in funding, although visitor facilities might have to be expanded and staff increased for the adjacent areas. Private activities

History says Craters may erupt soon

By N.S. NOKKENTVED
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Geologists believe the Craters of the Moon may be due for a period of eruptions.

"The only thing we know is if this past history of Craters is accurate, then the longer until the next eruption, the higher the probability of that eruption becomes," said Mel Kuntz, a U.S. Geological Survey geologist said. The last eruption at the Craters was about 2,200 years ago. Craters history show it has erupted about every 2,000 years, Kuntz said.

The next eruption could be expected within the next 1,000 years if patterns of the past history hold true or if the Craters hasn't reached the end of an eruptive period, Kuntz said.

Craters of the Moon is unique among Idaho lava flows.

Other lava flows result from a single burst or a series of eruptions over a relatively short period of geological time, followed by no activity for 50,000 to 100,000 years. But Craters of the Moon, known as a composite field, is the result of many different flows in the same place.

The Craters flows are localized along a short section of a rift zone, with many eruptions in the same area over a long time.

A rift zone is an area of long, deep cracks in the earth's crust. The cracks in the Great Rift Zone, of which Craters is part, average one to

Mini-Cassia leaders look for tourist influx if Craters is a park

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY – The Mini-Cassia area would benefit greatly if Craters of the Moon National Monument becomes a national park, civic leaders in the area say.

"The number of tourists would automatically go up just because it is a national park," Burley Mayor Ken Fronk said. "Let's face it. Some of us are a little bit greedy and we think we want some tourist business in this state."

Some local residents have banded together to promote the idea and Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, is pushing the designation. Craters of the Moon Development Inc. drew up its own plans for the park to include areas outside the existing monument and has lobbied the state's lawmakers and National Park Service officials. They've also published a slick brochure detailing the natural attractions in the area.

Despite a preliminary Park Service recommendation that Craters be named a national science reserve, Stinstead of a national park, Stallings said he hasn't given up.

"Craters as a national park would have tremendous implications for the area's economy, by giving some needed visibility to one of Idaho's undiscovered places," Stallings said.

"It gives it additional standing and importance," said Cary Jones, legislative aide to Stallings. "This could attract thousands of visitors each year and stimulate the economy of many Idaho communities."

Glen Allen of Rupert, president of Development Inc., said the group would like a road built from Arco to Rupert. This would increase tourist traffic as far as Twin Falls, not just to the Mini-Cassia area.

"There's no question it would be a benefit to the area," Allen said.

The road would allow local residents to commute to work at the park and also to jobs at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory in Arco, he said.

Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho, however, said the economic benefits of a nearby town shouldn't be part of the Park Service's decision. And it likely didn't play a role. The Park Service looks primarily at the physical attractions of an area when considering recommending national parks, Allen said.

Promoters of Craters as a national park say the area has plenty to offer visitors.

Many areas are completely unprotected, Fronk said, and some of the varieties of flora and volcanisms are

No one said teaching would be simple

Diana Hooley
Country neighbors

I heard a killdeer the other morning out on my early morning walk. He sang his familiar song skipping over ice puddles in the field. The last time I heard him, a droughty wind was stirring harvest dust, Ronald Reagan was president and I had a new job – teaching.

Some things have changed. We've been flooded for the last three days and Mr. Bush is beginning to sound less and less vice-presidential and more and more presidential. But I, even though time has passed and the killdeer has gone and come again, I still have a very new job – teaching.

I sometimes wonder when my apprenticeship will be over. When will I be able to spot a spitwad at 50 paces or slow the teaming horde of students exiting my room every lunchbell? When will I not have to hide the gun and the powder grenade – otherwise known as a stapler and chalkboard eraser – in my classroom?

All of these are just superficial problems though. I suppose any job that deals with as many personalities on a daily basis as mine does, carries an in-training period that may span years.

I have a friend who works in an office with seven other employees. Before I started my job and was at home kneading farm bread and having arguments with no one more volatile than myself, my friend would call, exasperated about some fellow worker who refused to take their turn making coffee or who messed up the office files.

I easily recognized office politics for the villain it is. Now managing a super office containing 150 different workers (despite gossip to the contrary, junior high students can work) I have sometimes forgotten there are good reasons at the end of the day to feel stressed out.

One day last week I had to ask a student to leave the classroom for making repeated, inappropriate comments in class. For example, I asked "Who can tell me what guerrilla warfare is?" His reply was, "A bunch of monkeys fighting."

Ten minutes later when all the seventh graders in class had had their turn at demonstrating what

Residents appeal Lane Ranch development plan

By KRISTAN WATKINS
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY – Property owners near the proposed Lane Ranch development have appealed its preliminary approval.

An appeal was filed Thursday by Hailey attorney James Phillips on behalf of eight property owners near the proposed development. The appeal states no specific allegations but requests a public hearing before the Sun Valley City Council, which just received the controversial subdivision from the planning and zoning board.

The appeal is set forth in the Sun Valley subdivision ordinance.

The planning and zoning board gave preliminary plat approval Feb. 14 to the development after about six public hearings.

Some nearby residents have opposed the project saying it will be too dense for one of the few remaining open spaces in the gateway to Sun Valley.

According to Sun Valley City Councilman Sean McCoy, the next step is to set a date for the hearing. "If an appeal is filed, then we have about 30 days to set a date for the hearing," McCoy said. The council can also call a special meeting or wait until next month's regular meeting to set the date, he said.

McCoy said he feels the appellants have a good chance of getting the decision reversed. Proposed roads within the development don't comply with city ordinances, he said.

"I don't know of any subdivision that has been approved contingent upon changing city ordinances," McCoy said.

The planning board approved the preliminary plat last week with a list of contingencies, including amending a city ordinance to accommodate roads within the subdivision.

Twin Falls attorney Evan Robertson, attorney for the developers, said he doesn't think any of the contingencies will put a hold on the Lane Ranch. "Most subdivisions have a whole list of contingencies. I think we will prevail on all of them," Robertson said.

"We think we got a favorable ruling from planning and zoning," said Robertson. "We're going to continue at pace and we think we have a project that is a real asset to the city."

Plans still are to begin underground work as soon as weather permits, he said.

The city of Sun Valley has not set a hearing date. Their next regularly scheduled council meeting is March 21. At that time a date will be set.

Local forum discusses INEL, nuclear issues

By N.S. NOKKENTVED

TWIN FALLS – The best thing for Idaho is not necessarily immediate cleanup of waste at INEL but a sensible national nuclear waste program, said one of the panelists at Saturday's forum on nuclear issues in Idaho.

Cleanup at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory is not in Idaho's best interest if it's bought at the expense of cleanup at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation in Washington or any of the other places around the country with nuclear contamination problems as bad or worse than Idaho's, said Pat Ford, former director of the Idaho Conservation League.

Five panelists faced the public Saturday in a forum sponsored by the Fellowship of Reconciliation of Twin Falls. The meeting fostered discussion of issues of waste cleanup, oversight of activities at INEL and the future of nuclear weapons production at INEL.

Liz Paul, director of the Snake River Alliance, opened the discussion by saying the strength of recent legislation to create a state oversight program of INEL operations is simply the fact that it's happening.

"This is the first time this sort of legislation has moved through the legislature," she said. But the legislation also was vague and didn't address political, economic and ethical aspects of the U.S. Department of Energy's activities at INEL, she said.

"Why do we assume the citizens want the state involved in making nuclear weapons?" Paul asked.

But ethical and political questions don't belong in the legislature, Ford said. Those questions are best addressed in public debate.

If Idaho geology would allow it, the possibility of a permanent waste repository in the state would make Idahoans confront the waste disposal issue "a little more honestly," Ford said. The waste is a fact and must be dealt with in a rational manner. Whatever is done with the waste now is experimental. Whether that disposal is successful won't be known for generations, he said.

Rob Brady, former publisher of the Idaho Falls Post-Register, said even if the proposed projects, the Special Isotope Separator – a laser-driven plutonium refinery – and the New Production Reactor – a reactor that would produce tritium for nuclear weapons – didn't come to INEL, cleanup would provide a lot of jobs. The Energy Department recently committed nearly $500 million for waste cleanup.

On the question of cleanup, Thomas Gesell, director of the radiological and environmental sciences

Thompson Creek mine signs power agreement with BPA

The Associated Press

CHALLIS — Cyprus Minerals' Thompson Creek molybdenum mine got a boost with the signing of a reduced power rate contract with the Bonneville Power Administration.

The contract was signed Thursday and will be forwarded to BPA headquarters in Portland, Ore., for final approval before the new rate will take effect.

Thompson Creek Mine is expected save about 25 percent in wholesale power costs as a result of BPA's "Staying Power" program. Pat Fitch, mine general manager and vice president, said the savings will amount to "several hundred thousand dollars" over the contract's 2½-year term.

Employment at the mine, located about 30 miles west of Challis, is holding steady at 380, Fitch said, up from a low of just over 100 full-time employees following the 1987 layoffs.

The mine is undergoing a $1 million mill expansion that will improve its ability to produce high-grade molybdenum. Fitch said the expansion should be complete by mid-summer.

Thompson Creek is one of two industries approved for the program offered by the region's federal energy wholesaler. The mine applied to participate in March 1988, Fitch said.

Dow Corning, serviced through the Springfield Utility Board in Oregon, is the only other Northwest industry participating in the year-old program.

The program is designed to market surplus BPA power while assisting industries that face imminent closure due to economic factors. It also aims to help stabilize the energy loads and revenue of utilities serving the industries involved, in this case Salmon River Electric Cooperative.

Thursday's contract signing culminated more than two years of effort by the Salmon River Electric, Idaho's congressional delegation and Gov. Cecil Andrus.

Although activity has picked up considerably at the mine since a downturn in August 1987 that saw over 100 employees laid off, Fitch said the reduced rate still is considered necessary to keep the mine viable in a volatile market.

In return for the reduced rate, Thompson Creek has completed an extensive energy audit and has received BPA approval of a plan to increase energy efficiency. Fitch said Cyprus also has agreed to continue development of the open-pit mine.

not found anywhere in the world.

As an expanded area, taking in the Great Rift, Crystal Ice Caves, Big Southern Butte and several other sites, Craters of the Moon will be much more enjoyable and interesting to people who stop there, Fronk said.

Allen said the expansion would take in much more area and "more highlights of that volcanology history" in the desert between Minidoka and Arco.

The Crystal Ice Caves near American Falls needs to be included for its own protection, he said. "It's been vandalized tremendously and it's one of it's kind in the whole United States and maybe in the world," Allen said. "Those things need to be preserved. The only way they can be managed correctly is through a national park."

Allen said broad support for making Craters of the Moon into a national park has come from Preston, Soda Springs, Blackfoot, Idaho Falls, American Falls and even Mountain Home. "But we haven't had as much support as we would like out of Twin Falls and the Magic Valley," he said.

Fronk said he likes the park idea for its protective aspect.

He said it would be ideal to have a national park in Idaho by the 1990 Centennial year. But if that does not happen, "we're still not going to give up on it because we still think it has a lot to offer," he said.

two meters wide and several hundred meters to several kilometers long. Lava flows result when magma is forced up through weak spots along these cracks.

The Snake River Plain stretches from Payette to Island Park, and is about 50 to 100 kilometers wide. Its surface is marked by numerous lava flows. The flows in the western part of the plain range from 15 million to 18 million years old. The flows in the eastern part of the plain are 100,000 years old and younger, Kuntz said.

Eight lava flows have been identified as younger than 15,000 years, though the carbon-dating method used may be flawed, Kuntz said. Those fields include Craters, Hells Half Acre, Sierra Grande, King Bowl, Wapi and the Shoshone Lava Field.

The youngest field, about 2,000 years old, is in the Craters and so is the oldest.

Though Yellowstone is located above the most active hot spot in the earth's crust, it is not the only spot of "eruptive activity," he said.

on those lands would also be restricted.

"If we simply took the existing area and changed that into a national park without changing the boundaries, there would be no change," Miller said. "But the proposal all along has been to look at an expanded area.

"Hunting and grazing and mineral activities would all have to stop," he added. "That's a consideration."

That also seems to be a consideration for McClure.

"It's not merely a matter of changing the name," said McClure aide H.D. Palmer. "It affects a number of things: water rights, hunting and grazing."

laboratory at INEL, said that in a time of short money the Energy Department might be likely to walk away from an expensive cleanup. The state's greatest lever to get a site cleaned up is the department's desire to build new projects.

The state has not been involved in any monitoring at the site since 1984, said Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly.

"The state is starting at ground zero," Noh said. Now the state must play "catch-up ball" in establishing a monitoring program. The legislation that Ford helped Noh's committee to write is a start on an oversight program that is likely to span the next few decades.

Most questions from the audience reflected a distrust of the Energy Department and its operations at INEL.

"Why should I believe INEL about my well when its own is polluted?" one person asked referring to contaminated ground water at the Test Area North and fears that the Snake River Plain aquifer may be contaminated.

Gesell maintained the INEL position, based on U.S. Geological Survey groundwater monitoring, that no radioactive contamination in the aquifer has moved beyond the site boundaries and water treatment has been installed to rectify the problem of past solvent disposal at the Test Area North.

Stephen Hartgen, managing editor of the Times-News, moderated the panel.

Jackpot hopes for grant money to fund airport improvements

KATHY VITEK
Times-News correspondent

JACKPOT – City officials here hope to receive grant money to pay for a project at the airport.

The Jackpot Advisory Board last week discussed strengthening the runway, adding tiedowns and a new beacon. Grant funds from the Aviation Trust Fund are available for the project, Bill Block and Jim Lickliter from JUB Engineers in Twin Falls told the board.

The engineers, who specialize in rules and regulations of airports, would prepare the pre-application including cost estimates and preliminary engineering required for the grant. Their fee of $650-$850 would be built into the grant, if funded.

The board passed a motion to suggest that the Elko County Commissioners allow the JUB to apply for the grant.

Jackpot previously received two grants from the fund to build the runway and to buy lighting for it.

The town has a good change to receive the third grant because the city hasn't applied for one in several years, the engineers said. It could be resubmitted the following year if not funded this October. The grant would fund 93 percent of the upgrade cost.

The runway requires strengthening for heavier aircraft. This might be the time to get the grant because the casinos will look strongly into bringing in shuttles," Boardmember Richard Carsen said.

If shuttles with 33 passengers begin landing, the airport will need a crash truck available, Fire Chief Carl Marr advised the board.

The runway also requires crack sealing, which will be done this spring. Ace, Gurley and Progressive Streets will receive crack sealing at the same time as the runway.

Cactus Pete's General Manager Doug Smith told the board that the business will submit a plan to the Elko County Planning Board to build three more levels above Desert Lodge. This would be considered a high rise and require a change in building category.

The board may seed the baseball diamond this summer so the local Babe Ruth League doesn't have to travel to Elko again for games. League representatives told the board traveling to the county sent for games was extremely inconvenient.

The board recommended the seeding with the condition that water won't be used on the field if the town has a shortage this summer.

The town will soon have brighter street lights. The county commissioners approved the new lights.

Board members were assigned town responsibilities. They are: Dale Jack, streets and lights; Carrie Yokum, parks and recreation, including the golf course; Doug Smith, airport and public safety; Bruce Whitehead, landfill, water and sewer; and Richard Carsen, tourism.

In other business, the fifth well may not come on line until after the peak water season due to the time schedule required for applications. The board has requested consultant help from the commissioners.

Trout group holds annual trade show

TWIN FALLS – The United States Trout Farmers Association will hold its annual meeting and trade show here this week.

Registration, trade show, board meeting, cocktail parties and banquet will be at the Holiday Inn. Workshops, general meeting sessions, ladies' luncheon and the president's reception will be across the street at the Canyon Springs Inn.

Activities begin Monday with a short hatchery management course. The course continues on Tuesday, and the second session will be on Wednesday and Thursday. The course is offered primarily for Idaho residents and will be conducted at the College of Southern Idaho.

The meeting itself will get under way Thursday with the board of directors meeting beginning at 7 p.m. The meeting and trade show will continue Friday through Sunday. Events include a hatchery tour, a keynote address by Larry Cope, president of Clear Springs Trout Co. and the presentation of research on topics relating to fish farming.

The association has had its annual meeting in Twin Falls in 1983 and in Sun Valley in 1985.

Rupert water rates will be going up

By LONA RAYMOND
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT – Water rates here are going up a bit.

The City Council last week unanimously approved a rate hike in the city-owned water company. Beginning April 1 residential rates will rise 50 cents to $5.50 for the first 2,000 gallons. More than 2,000 gallons will be charged at 50 cents per thousand.

For commercial users the rate will go to $9 from $8 for the first 2,000 gallons, with amounts over 2,000 gallons charged at 80 cents per thousand. The minimum charge for commercial use will be $9.

Temporary shut-off fees will be $5 from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. and $15 for after-hours and holidays. Turn-on fees for non-payment will rise to $15 from $7.50 after-hours and holidays. For new users there will be no turn-on fee during office hours, but after hours and holidays hookups will cost $15.

The council is also considering raising the sprinkling rate to encourage conservation this summer but details have yet to be worked out.

Mayor Bill Whittom said the canal flood method should be used whenever possible rather than the high-pressure system.

In other matters, the council accepted a donation of $100 from Schow's Pharmacy, which capped off the fund-raising for the Big Valley School sidewalks.

Construction will begin as soon as the weather settles.

Councilman Joel Rogers told the council that due to popular demand there will be Monday garbage pick-ups following holidays, thanks to extra efforts of the workers.

A bid of $23,999 was accepted from Kim Hansen Chevrolet for two new police cars. The search for the vehicles proceeded slowly due to local dealers continuously coming up with creative alternatives to the original specs.

A Taxing Experience.

From the beginning of the Social Security system through 1983, there was no federal, state or local tax imposed on the benefits. However, that has all changed. Since 1983, up to half of Social Security benefits are subject to federal income tax if income is above a certain level. To calculate if benefits are taxable, a person must begin by adding up his pension payments, investment income, and any job earnings. After subtracting any exclusions to which he is entitled, he ends up with his adjustable gross income. Next, municipal bond interest must be added to the figure, even though it is exempt from federal income tax. Lastly, half of the person's annual social Security benefits must be included. If the grand total exceeds $32,000 for a married person filing jointly ($25,000 for a single person), taxation comes into play.

The tax on Social Security benefits comes as and unpleasant surprise for many retirees. It's important to start planning for your retirement, even if it's many years away. Wise investments now can make the difference between a comfortable retirement and being forced into a dramatically different lifestyle. Consult

Spending spree turns surplus to deficit

Idaho Legislature 1989

BOISE (AP) — Less than two months ago, Idaho's Centennial Legislature opened amid an economic boom that had already produced a $52 million revenue surplus and the promise of strong tax collections for another 18 months.

It was an atmosphere that had not been experienced before in the 1980s. The political talk finally shifted from tax increases and tight budgets to underwriting long-postponed state projects and programs and still banking some cash as a hedge against future fiscal trouble.

Only a handful of lawmakers warned the huge surplus would actually cause as many — if not more — budgeting problems than the financial crises the state had coped with throughout much of this decade.

But the seventh week of the 1989 session proved those few voices right. The black ink that bolstered optimism in January turned red last week when budget writers depleted the surplus in a spending spree that set them on the road toward a double-digit deficit.

GOP leaders have not panicked yet, but talk has again turned to some kind of tax increase, maybe even a phase-out of the once-staunchly defended business investment tax credit, to get things back on track. Thoughts of a reserve fund are dissipating rapidly.

"If there's money there, we find a way to spend it," admitted Senate Finance Chairman Atwell Parry, R-Melba, one of the few to predict the financial problems lawmakers now face.

The Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee made good on GOP pledges to provide more support for public and higher education than Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus recommended in a budget criticized by most Republicans because he wanted a $12 million business tax hike to keep it balanced.

But to capture the needed votes on the regionally divisive higher education budget, the panel added an extra $20 million for public works projects on every campus around the state.

That opened the gate, and by week's end the committee had also sweetened the pot for junior colleges and other education programs in the name of fairness and bolstered support for senior citizen in-home care and the judiciary.

"It took me by surprise," said House Republican Floor Leader Gary Montgomery of Boise, "and I admit it concerns me."

Administration economists estimated the committee's actions, if left untouched, mean a deficit of over $14 million that could grow if its largesse continues.

At the same time, however, the panel's spending binge has renewed optimism within the administration that the governor's proposal to repeal the investment tax credit may be rising from the dead.

Legislative leaders, willing to admit to red ink of $10 million, conceded the purse-strings have to be drawn tight.

"We must be frugal," Senate GOP Floor Leader Roger Fairchild said, "not act like sailors on leave."

But the budgets still to be set leave little room for cutting without threatening massive amounts of federal money for health and welfare programs or incurring the wrath of the federal courts for failing to ease overcrowded prison conditions. Meeting those demands could make the potential deficit even larger.

And the bills already passed appear to be gaining support among House and Senate members.

Clearwater timber sales to increase

LEWISTON (AP) — Forest Service officials intend to increase Clearwater National Forest timber sales this year, offering up an additional 23 million board feet of wood.

The directive calls for the Clearwater Forest to boost timber sales there to 165 million board feet from the 141.6 million that had been planned.

The move renewed debate about whether the Clearwater can produce 173 million board feet a year as outlined in the Forest Service's 10-year management plan, which took effect in September 1987.

"The Idaho Wildlife Federation has long maintained that the 173 was politically motivated and not based on biologically sound data," said Federation President Kent Henderson of Lewiston.

Parents sue after child is run over

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The parents of a 2-year-old Idaho Falls girl killed when a van backed over her last year have filed suit against the babysitter who drove the van.

Steven and Robin Piet filed the action this week in 7th District Court in Idaho Falls against Bronwyn Hammond, 33, also of Idaho Falls.

The suit contends Ms. Hammond, who was providing paid day care at her home for the Piets' daughter Monica, was negligent June 14 when she backed her van over the child. It also alleges that she failed to follow proper first-aid procedures in treating the child.

Officials: Prison sewage facility OK

BOISE (AP) — Environmental concerns about the sewage lagoon for the new maximum-security prison near Boise can be overcome, state officials say, but the owner of a farm below disagrees.

An engineering study completed this week on the proposed 26-acre lagoon indicates construction could be completed in time for the prison's opening on Oct. 15, if environmental permits are granted soon.

Public Works Director G. Anne Barker said Friday the lagoon does not need to be relocated despite groundwater and flooding concerns.

Lionel Hampton critical of colleges

MOSCOW (AP) — While the University of Idaho's music school has earned the praise of its namesake, vibes player Lionel Hampton, he is not so generous with other institutions, including black colleges.

He was in Moscow for the Lionel Hampton-Chevron Jazz Festival, which included trumpeter Wynton Marsalis and Boise's Gene Harris, a nominee for a Grammy for big bands.

Black colleges missed the boat by not bringing jazz into the curriculum back in the 1930s and 1940s when swing was big, Hampton said at a Friday news conference. Back when Hampton broke the color barrier, playing with the Benny Goodman Quartet in the 1930s, he went to black colleges and offered to help put jazz in the classroom. But the schools didn't want any part of "that dirty music," he said.

Now jazz is shunted aside for the flash and glitter of rock'n'roll. "That ain't even music," Hampton said.

Police arrest teen in father's death

BOISE (AP) — A 14-year-old Meridian-area boy has been arrested for suspicion of first-degree murder in Friday night's shooting death of his father, Ada County Sheriff's Capt. Roy Holloway said.

John Steven Broadhead, 42, was found dead in his home Friday night after deputies were called to the residence just east of Meridian. His son, Jeremy Broadhead, was arrested early Saturday by Meridian police, Holloway said.

"Everything appears it was a homicide, and not self-inflicted," said Ada County Coroner Erwin Sonnenberg, who scheduled an autopsy Saturday.

Broadhead was the chief financial officer for Idaho Timber Products, a Boise-based wood-products company. Sonnenberg said friends went to the house searching for Broadhead when he did not turn up for work Friday and no one answered calls to his home.

Boeing employees stand in front of the first 747-400, above, after a test flight, while workers, right, assemble a wing in the latest version of the successful jumbo jet

Keeping up the pace

Can't-say-no policy puts Boeing behind schedule

Los Angeles Times

EVERETT, Wash. — In the autumn of 1988, the president of Boeing Commercial Airplanes Co. faced an unpleasant task: telling 10 important customers that the expensive new jets they had ordered would be late.

It was an embarrassing chore for Dean Thornton, whose company prides itself on meeting deadlines. There was a chance it could cost Boeing money if contracts had to be renegotiated. And worse yet, it involved Boeing's newest product, the 747-400.

They were the first major delivery delays since the early days of the 747 program, 20 years earlier.

Unforeseen manufacturing problems, on top of a tight flight-test schedule, had forced Boeing to push back the delivery dates on 20 of the jets by about a month each, Thornton told the airlines.

In December, Thornton had to make two more phone calls to launch customer Northwest Airlines to announce more delays as flight-test problems continued to haunt Boeing.

Parts shortages have hurt production, too said Bill Shineman, vice president and general manager of the Everett Division, where the wide-body aircraft is assembled. So has a work force filled with new, less-experienced employees. A rush of initial orders hasn't made it easier.

"Our success has been part of the problem on this airplane," he said. "We offered this airplane and sold it to more customers early on than we anticipated. And they had more variations in the airplane than we've ever had."

When the 747-400 was launched by Northwest Airlines in October 1985, Boeing executives said they had hoped to book orders for 50 by this time. Instead, they have sold 166 747-400s, with several big sales still pending.

Shineman admitted some of the popularity probably can be attributed to Boeing's "can't say no" attitude. Boeing has always bent over backward to accommodate its customers, he said, but this time the huge aerospace giant may have gone too far.

Most of the international airlines that ordered the 747-400 wanted to move galleys and lavatories and add flight-deck equipment to make their version look different from the competition. Moving many of the galleys and lavatories required changes in floor supports as well as wiring and plumbing.

Boeing obliged.

"We can't do what Henry Ford did and tell them you can have anything you want as long as the plane is black," Shineman said. "We've got to offer variety to our customers."

To limit the variety, Boeing is developing a catalog that lists various changes that are available on the 747-400, he said. If future customers want changes that aren't listed, they may have to pay millions more.

On the brighter side, parts of the new interiors, like the partitions and seats, practically fall into the airplane, he said. Galleys and lavatories, too, if they're within the designated "footprints."

But by letting customers make a lot of changes in galley and lavatory arrangements, Boeing has not been able to keep up with its ambitious production rates. Last fall, jumbo-jet production increased to four planes a month from three. By March, it will increase again to five.

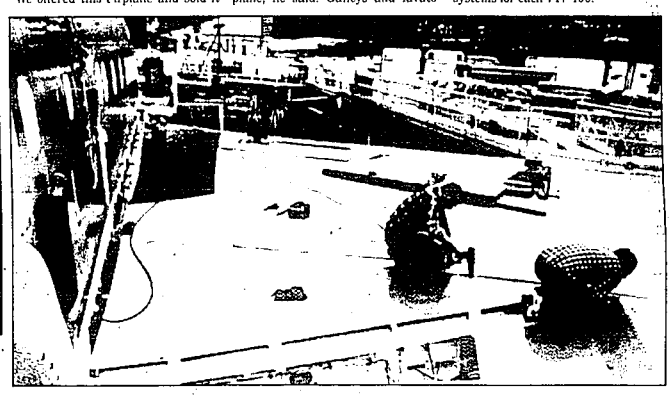

"The flow time it takes from when you engineer the product until you get it out the door has been tight internally," Shineman said. "We've had more shortages from our suppliers and ourselves than we want."

The finger points squarely at Boeing, he said, because Boeing was late getting the engineering and tooling orders out to its 1,500 primary suppliers and 15,000 secondary suppliers. Those suppliers produce 4.5 million parts, 135 miles of wire, and 2,000 pieces of tubing alone for each 747-400.

As if this weren't difficult enough, Boeing has made it even tougher with all the last-minute changes, suppliers said.

"We are having problems with the short lead times," said Toshi Sugiura, general manager at Jamco America Inc., an Everett manufacturer that builds lavatory modules for the plane.

Keeping up the pace has been made even harder with Boeing luring skilled labor away from its suppliers, said Tom Brown, executive vice president and chief financial officer at Eldec Corp. in Lynnwood, Wash. Eldec makes $100,000 worth of engine flow meters, power devices and sensing systems for each 747-400.

United accident latest in Boeing's aging, production problems

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — The hole that tore open a United Airlines 747 on Friday near Hawaii was reminiscent of a near-disaster in the same area last year and seemed likely to become the latest in a series of public relations nightmares for Boeing Co.

Problems with aging aircraft, miswired emergency systems in some newer planes, production delays on the giant 747-400 and a series of tragic crashes have combined to focus unusual attention on the world's biggest maker of commercial jetliners, particularly in the past 60 days.

"What you have here is a series of events and the only correlation is that they're happening in the same time frame. But if you dissect each one you will find that they're totally unrelated," said David Jimenez, a spokesman for Boeing Commercial Airplanes, the Boeing subsidiary that has prided itself on high-class workmanship and a strong safety record in its planes.

He added, however, that with news reports of problems coming one after another, "it does become one large blur to the public."

"It's made for a very intense period of being scrutinized, sometimes unfairly, and that's a difficult thing to counter because the incidents are happening ... and we don't always have time to explain ourselves," Jimenez said.

There was no immediate word on the cause of Friday's incident, in which nine people apparently were sucked from the United Airlines jet when a 10-by-40-foot vertical hole opened in its fuselage. The flight had taken off a few minutes earlier for Auckland, New Zealand, and Sydney, Australia.

It brought to mind an accident April 28, also over Hawaii. A flight attendant was killed and 61 people injured when a portion of the fuselage on a Boeing 737 peeled off during an Aloha Airlines flight from Hilo to Honolulu, exposing the first-class section to the open air at 24,000 feet. The pilot and co-pilot managed to land the jet although one of the two engines quit.

In December, an Eastern Airlines Boeing 727 with 104 passengers and six crew aboard was forced to land at Yeager Airport in Charleston, W.Va., after a 14-inch hole opened in its fuselage at 31,000 feet.

The first incident led to widespread concern about the safety of aging jets like the Aloha 737. Tiny cracks were found in nearly half the aging Boeing 737 jetliners inspected in the months following the Aloha accident.

More recently, a series of crashes focused attention on Boeing jets: the Dec. 21 terrorist bombing of a Pan American 747 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in which nearly 300 people on board and on the ground died; the January crash of a British Midland Airways 737 in England, killing 44 people; and the Feb. 8 crash of a chartered 707 in the Azores, which killed 144 people.

Airlines have voted with their dollars, however, in expressing their continuing confidence in Boeing airplanes. All Nippon Airways on Wednesday ordered 20 new 747-400s in a deal valued at $3.1 billion. Orders in 1988 topped $30 billion for 636 planes, both record figures for the industry.

Commodities investigation draws smirks

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — This is a town that's witnessed judges on the take and politicians on the make and a school of scandal whose roster has drawn from the courts, the cops, even City Hall.

Now the feds are creating a stir in Chicago's business arena with a massive fraud investigation of the high-stakes, frenzied futures exchanges, the world's largest commodity markets.

But in a city that once was Al Capone's turf and has recently seen police convicted of protecting drug dealers, judges booted off the bench for taking bribes and aldermen put behind bars, talk of skullduggery in the risky business of financial futures elicits more smirks than scowls.

"Since the political process has sanctioned corruption so long, the fact that it occurs in business is no great surprise to Chicago," said Dick Simpson, a former alderman. "Chicagoans are not much surprised (that) people are stealing with big bucks as opposed to a $500 bribe. It's not shocking to the Chicago mentality."

"It's like a spectator sport," said Simpson, who now teaches political science at the University of Illinois-Chicago. "It'll be interesting (for people) to see if 50 traders go to jail or 20, or if it's a millionaire or some runner. It's like watching a bullfight or a football game. There isn't condemnation. There isn't outrage that it would be a crime."

Nobody has yet been indicted in the probe of the Chicago Board of Trade and Chicago Mercantile Exchange, where millions of dollars are made and lost on future prices of items ranging from soybeans to foreign currency. The investigation purportedly involves charges that as many as 100 brokers and traders systematically cheated customers and profited in illegal deals.

In the probe, called Operation Sour Mash and Operation Hedgeclipper, FBI agents reportedly posed as traders, leased luxury apartments and wined and dined brokers, recording conversations with hidden tape recorders and wireless microphones disguised as pens and rings.

The probe of the trading pits follows a history of Chicago scandals and scoundrels, ranging from men who were cleats — eight members of the 1919 Chicago White Sox who threw the World Series — to men who fixed court cases.

At times it seems as if the city of Big Shoulders has become the home of greased palms.

"Things that happen here all the time would bring down a government in Europe," said political strategist Don Rose, who's worked in several mayoral campaigns. "One thing that contributes to Chicago's reputation for corruption ... is the higher tolerance (for it)."

Drugs, alcohol most likely to get you fired

By The Washington Post

Drug and alcohol abuse are more likely to cost you your job than incompetence.

That's the conclusion of more than 1,100 personnel administrators who were surveyed by Right Associates, a Philadelphia firm that specializes in outplacement counseling.

The administrators, who are responsible for career development, were asked to rank 17 factors most likely to stall a career. Drug and alcohol abuse were cited most frequently, followed by professional incompetence and personality clashes at the office.

"The belief used to be that if you can't do the job, you shouldn't have the job," said Virginia M. Lord, senior vice president of Right Associates. "Now the crackdown on drugs and alcohol is taking precedence."

The results show the importance companies are placing on maintaining drug-free work places. Nationally, some 45 percent of companies now require drug testing, according to a recent study conducted by management consultants Towers, Perrin, Foster and Crosby.

Costly safety violations and liability suits caused by substance abuse are causing companies to take serious rehabilitative and disciplinary actions against employees.

According to the survey, another barrier to the fast track is good old-fashioned laziness, or not working as hard as your boss thinks you should.

Choosing the wrong career, not being able to handle work-related stress and being inadequately educated for the job also are career killers.

The consensus was that personal problems don't do a career much good. Incidents of sexual harassment, professional jealousy by supervisors and peers, marital discord, being a target in a discrimination suit or having wages garnished can derail careers.

Companies also do not look kindly on employees who are reluctant to move, who file a discrimination suit or chide the government in on Occupational Safety and Health Administration violations.

Least important to career advancement are personal image and ethnic background.

Ag secretary says cutback decisions not yet made

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — No decision has been made on how to squeeze $2 billion out of farm programs to meet federal spending goals, but analysts are looking at all possibilities, Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter said Friday.

"We'll find a way to do so because that's a requirement of the (budget) process," Yeutter told reporters. "Agriculture will have to play its part in that process."

He added: "We'll look everywhere, obviously. It'll have to be done on the basis of economic analysis. We're not going to do it in an arbitrary or capricious way and that means analyzing all the options and combinations of options."

About $2 billion will have to be whittled from programs in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. Those cuts were not specified in the budget proposals submitted by the outgoing Reagan administration in January and were left open to be negotiated with Congress.

Yeutter served as U.S. trade representative in the Reagan administration before President Bush tapped him to be secretary of agriculture.

No senior aides to Yeutter at the Agriculture Department have yet been announced by the White House, and key jobs are still being carried out by holdovers from the Reagan administration.

However, Yeutter said at a news conference that he was hopeful an announcement would be made soon on the No. 2 post of deputy secretary, probably "within the next few days."

Reports circulated last week that Yeutter and some presidential aides had been bickering over filling the deputy secretary job, with Yeutter favoring Jack Parnell, the California agricultural commissioner, or Sam Hollis, a cotton warehouseman from Memphis, Tenn.

Drilling for oil, gas down 38% so far in '89, nears 2-year low

DENVER (AP) — Drilling for oil and gas fell 38 percent below last year's level during the first six weeks of the year, approaching a two-year low, industry figures released this week show.

A report by Houston-based Baker Hughes Co. said 60 drilling rigs were working in the 11-state Rocky Mountain region during the week ended Feb. 10, compared with 66 the previous week and 96 during the last week of 1988.

Jim Anderson of Denver-based Petroleum Information Inc. said it was the lowest rig count in the Rockies since February 1987, when 58 rigs were working. The region's all-time low is 51 active rigs, reported during the same month of 1987, he said.

Nationwide, there were 746 active drilling rigs, compared with 968 for the same week last year. Officials said the all-time low for the nationa rig count was 663 in July 1983.

A preference by major oil companies for Gulf Coast and overseas exploration was blamed for the decline in activity in this region.

"They (the majors) said all through last year that a lot of their budgets would go to international exploration," said Curtis Hill, president of Denver-based Exeter Drilling Co.

Dick Brewster of Amoco Production Co. in Denver said the company drilled about 225 wells in 1988, but plans to drill about 40 percent of that number this year.

Anderson said he was surprised recent oil price increases had not spurred more activity in the Rocky Mountains.

"Oil prices are reasonably solid and certainly no worse than last year, and natural gas prices are up compared to last year," he said. "So, I don't know what it means."

Alf Humphries, former oil analyst with Denver-based Hanifen Imhoff Inc., said he thinks the current activity reflects drilling planned when oil prices were $13 per barrel.

He predicted activity would pick up in the second quarter of this year, now that prices are headed above the $18 mark.

3 charged in Salt Lake fraudulent shelter case

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Three men have been charged in a 38-count federal grand jury indictment with having set up and operated a fraudulent tax shelter.

Acting U.S. Attorney Stewart Walz said Gregory H. Bloom, 33, of Orem; Stephen Fullmer, 41, of Riverside, Calif., and Emmett King, 34, of Arizona ran the errant shelter from March 1982 to about October 1986.

Walz, in a statement released Friday, said while all three are charged with conspiring to defraud the government, Bloom and King additionally are charged with knowingly and willfully preparing fraudulent income tax returns for investors in the tax shelter scheme.

The indictment further alleges that the three made false statements to a federal officer after the bogus shelter was discovered by the IRS.

Walz said the charges stem from investments made in Video Enterprises of Orem.

The defendants face maximum penalties of three years in prison a $250,000 fine on each of the counts they face, if convicted.

Trus Joist expands operations in Japan

BOISE – The Japanese are using structural building products from Trus Joist Corp. of Boise for their residential construction.

The firm's Japanese joint venture, Trus Joist Japan Co., Ltd., is in partnership with Taihei Machinery Works Ltd., a leading manufacturer of woodworking equipment.

In 1987, Trus Joist recorded Japanese sales of $150,000. Last year saw the firm's Japanese sales reach $1 million. Sales by Trus Joist's Japanese distributor, Oshika Shinko Co. Ltd., a manufacturer of plywood and adhesives, are off to a fast start in 1989.

"Japan is a huge and potentially lucrative market for our products. It will be one of our prime growth areas in the decade of the 90s," said Keith Erickson, director of international business development for the firm.

Last year Japan had approximately 1.7 million housing starts, the most of any country in the world.

A worldwide shortage of quality structural framing lumber exists. The last of the old-growth forests are being logged. The commercial tree farms that have replaced these forests grow lumber quickly, but at a cost: the lumber they produce isn't as strong or as consistent in quality as old-growth lumber.

Trus Joist Corp. is an operating division of TJ International, a $315 million specialty building products manufacturer that operates a window manufacturing division in Twin Falls.

Business failures show decrease for 1988

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. business failures declined 6.6 percent in 1988, the biggest drop in a decade, Dun & Bradstreet Corp. reported Thursday.

The business-information company said 57,098 businesses went under last year, compared with 61,111 in 1987.

"The significant decline in failures underscores the continued strength of the economy, now in its seventh year of expansion," said Joseph W. Duncan, chief economist for Dun & Bradstreet. "The nation's weakest regions are showing improvements, while those areas that led the expansion are holding their own."

The survey said failures were down in six of the nation's nine census regions, with only the Middle Atlantic states reporting a significant increase.

The decline in failures was especially notable in states with agriculture and oil-based economies, according to the survey.

Among oil businesses, failures were down or flat in seven of the nine major sectors. Agriculture failures dropped 51.6 percent to 1,823 from 3,766, and failures in the mining sector, which includes oil and gas extraction, were down 21.2 percent to 494 from 627.

"The dramatic decrease in agricultural failures in 1988 is attributable to the surge in failures in early 1987, as farmers took advantage of the new Chapter 12 bankruptcy code," Duncan said.

Chapter 12 allows troubled family farmers to reorganize their debts while being protected from their creditors.

The report also found that retail failures decreased 6.1 percent to 11,498 from 12,240, and services b. nkruptcies were down 4.7 percent to 22,686 from 23,802.

Manufacturing failures were down 1.6 percent to 4,204, while wholesale trade failures increased 2.7 percent to 4,455. Construction failures were essentially unchanged at 6,791.

Nordstrom reports increased earnings

SEATTLE (AP) — Nordstrom, a chain of upscale department stores, today reported fourth quarter net profits of $47.5 million, or 58 cents per share, on sales of $765.1 million.

In last year's fourth quarter, the Seattle-based chain earned $33.3 million, or 40 cents per share, on sales of $601.2 million.

For the fiscal year ending Jan. 31, 1989, Nordstrom netted $123.3 million, or $1.51 per share, on sales of $2.3 billion. In the previous fiscal year, it earned $92.7 billion, or $1.13 per share, on sales of $1.9 billion.

Spokesman John Goesling said the increase in net profits was due to lower federal taxes.

The board of directors voted to increase the quarterly dividend to $0.07 per share, from $0.055 per share, payable on March 15, 1989 to shareholders of record as of March 6, 1989.

Nordstrom has 42 main stores in the states of Washington, Alaska, Oregon, Utah, California and Virginia. Nordstrom also operates 16 smaller stores. It has plans for additional stores in Paramus, New Jersey; Chicago; and a second store in the Washington, D.C.

Fixed-rate mortgages increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fixed-rate home mortgages are averaging 10.78 percent, according to a national survey released Friday by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

That rate was up from a rate of 10.69 percent last week.

On one-year adjustable rate mortgages, lenders were asking an average initial rate of 8.73 percent this week, up from 8.68 percent the week before, Freddie Mac said.

North Korea delivers 1st shipment since war

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A freighter arrived at the port of Inchon on Friday with coal from North Korea, the first direct merchandise shipment from north to south since the Korean War.

The shipment comes just one day after South Korea's giant Hyundai conglomerate said it signed an agreement to build a tourist resort, shipyard and railroad plant in South Korea.

The South Korean government said Friday that it "in principle takes a favorable view of the proposed projects, regarding them as possible pilot projects that could contribute to efforts to achieve national unification."

The Conch, a Panamanian-registered freighter, took 20,900 tons of anthracite coal to the western port of Inchon.

Previous imports from the north have come came through third countries.

The North Korean coal was imported by Hyosung Corp., a South Korean trading firm, at $52.50 per ton or a total of $1.09 million.

On Thursday, South Korean tycoon Chung Ju-yung, Hyundai's honorary chairman, confirmed after returning from a 10-day trip to North Korea that he had agreed in principle with the north to undertake the resort and other projects along its east coast.

He was the first South Korean business leader known to have visited the north with the approval of both governments since Korea was split in 1945. The Koreas fought the Korean War from 1950 to 1953 and have never signed a peace treaty.

Under the agreement signed in the north's capital, Pyongyang, Hyundai and a North Korean state-run corporation will jointly develop a resort around scenic Mount Kumgang to attract South Koreans and foreigners, Chung said.

The Mount Kumgang area is about 20 miles from the demilitarized zone that divides the Koreas.

Chung told a airport news conference that the two sides also agreed to jointly develop resources in Siberia and to jointly operate a railroad rolling stock plant and a shipyard, both at Wonsan in the north. He had already discussed the Siberian projects with Soviet officials in Moscow.

The agreement was signed by Chung and Choe Su Gil, director of North Korea's Taesong Bank and consultant to the Korean Association of the Promotion of Asian Trade. Because both are state agencies, the Pyongyang government's approval of the projects was seen as guaranteed.

Chung said the projects are subject to approval form both governments, but one Seoul official said the south would approve the undertakings as a pilot project to stimulate inter-Korean cooperation. Seoul has been seeking direct trade and other exchanges to ease tension between the two Koreas with an eventual goal of reunification.

OFFICIAL TWIN FALLS COUNTY
DESIGN A FLAG CONTEST!

The Twin Falls County Centennial Flag Committee is looking for an official County Flag. The design will be picked from entries received. A winner will be announced in April. The State Centennial Commission has requested that each Idaho County provide a county flag to be flown on Capitol Boulevard in Boise during 1990. Twin Falls County's flag will first fly in Buhl at the Statehood Day Celebration July 2.

WINNER'S PRIZE: $250.00
OPEN TO ANY IDAHO RESIDENT OR PAST RESIDENT

Helpful hints and ideas for designing your flag entry:

- KEEP THE DESIGN SIMPLE. Don't try to put everything you can think of on your flag. The simpler the design, the more recognizable and remembered it will be. The original cost will be less as will the maintenance.
- MAKE THE DESIGN RECOGNIZABLE You should be able to recognize your flag from a distance as well as close up. Good examples are illustrated above.
- IF LETTERS OR EMBLEMS ARE USED, THEY SHOULD BE BIG.
- MAKE IT DISTINCTIVE
- DATELESS. The flag should be appropriate today, tomorrow and 30 years from today. Stay away from current or "trendy" fashions.
- DESIGN SHOULD HAVE MEANING AND BE SYMBOLIC. Have meaning for every Color, Emblem, Letter, Line, Arrangement, Form.
- GIVE YOUR DESIGN PROPER BALANCE AND ARRANGEMENT. Remember, Simple and bold is best.

RULES: The design should reflect the unique character and heritage of Twin Falls County. Scaled renderings should be submitted on plain white 8 ½ x 11 inch paper in the colors proposed. A narrative should accompany the rendering explaining symbolism, color and significance of design. It must be suitable for reproduction and must be identifiable from a reasonable distance. Simplicity will be a major consideration. Identify your design by writing name, address, and telephone number on the back of your attached narrative page. Entries will become the property of the flag committee.

Planning for that special day

Unexpected hitches in wedding ceremony make great memories

By LORAYNE ORTON SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Weddings provide happy memories, although in a recent survey our readers told us weddings sometimes yield unexpected memories as well.

Best men often fumble while performing their big duty of presenting the ring, but at the ceremony uniting Will and Nita Thomas of Gooding, the best man dropped it. And the ring didn't just lie there, waiting to be picked up.

"Have you ever seen a ring go rolling down the aisle with a 6-foot cowboy hot on its trail?" the bride of 31 years writes. He retrieved it moments before it was about to disappear in a heater grate.

It's the fly that kept buzzing around the fake flowers on her bridesmaid's bouquet that Kadra Ramsey, Twin Falls, remembers about her wedding. And that the lace on her dress got caught on the corner of a deck at the outdoor ceremony.

The old joke about being deserted at the church frequently surfaces to haunt nervous brides and grooms when the show is delayed, especially if they do not immediately know the reason.

Barbara Browning, Bellevue, was beginning to think that being left waiting at the church might be her fate. The wedding party was to be there early for pictures, but Browning's bridegroom, Carl, and his groomsmen were nowhere to be found, she writes.

The photographer had taken the last possible picture without the men and she was near tears when they all marched in wearing huge cowboy hats and enormous sunglasses to complement their tuxedos.

"I still crack up when I look at those pictures. What a great way to start a marriage which just keeps getting better and better," she says.

My husband, Vernon, also suspected the worst more than 40 years ago when our ceremony failed to start on time. Sequestered on the groom's side of the church, he was unaware we were waiting for a bridesmaid, a Times-News colleague now a retired school teacher in Oregon, who was living up to her claim that she never got anywhere on time. Several guests commented on how pale the bridegroom looked.

Sometimes it's the preacher who is late. Dennis and Beth Jensen, Shoshone, had been forewarned that the Rev. Bronson Ostle, Jerome, might be late because he also was working that day as an auctioneer.

So when guests had assembled for the 2 p.m., ceremony they simply posed for pictures, cut the cake and had the reception first!

The minister arrived in cowboy attire at 4 p.m. and after changing into his suit, which his wife dutifully had waiting, the wedding proceeded without any further hitch.

The bachelor party the night before the big day has long been and probably will continue to be a potential pitfall to the perfect wedding.

The story of David and Mary Ann Rice, Twin Falls, provides useful ammunition for prospective brides who understandably urge the boys to cool their last fling.

The Rices were married in a traditional Catholic ceremony which requires the couple to kneel before the priest as he performs the ritual. The bridegroom had been out celebrating with his old Marine Corps buddies the night before and had not had much to eat the day of the wedding.

"As were kneeling, I turned to give David a loving look, but to my horror he was white as a sheet, his eyes were rolled back, sweat pouring off his forehead and he was slowly slipping down," Mary Ann writes.

She grabbed his arm and signaled for the best man to grab the other arm so he wouldn't hit the floor. At that point the priest noticed what was happening and got David a chair, smelling salts, a glass of water and Kleenex.

"When the bridegroom recovered his composure the ceremony was completed with David sitting, and me kneeling holding the smelling salts and Kleenex and my brother laughing in the background," Mary Ann says.

"That was 19 years ago just the crazy start of a wonderful marriage that ... has really been a gift from God," she concludes.

Sometimes kneeling at the altar provides a story of another sort. Laren Price, Hailey, wondered why Gary's uncle would break the calm of their beautiful church wedding with a big loud laugh when it came time for the newlyweds to kneel.

Later she learned her own brother had taken Gary's shoes and on one had used tape to spell "HE" and on the other "LP."

For couples uninterested in a formal ceremony, finding someone to officiate within the available time or complying with varying state laws on matrimony become hurdles.

Ruth and Al Kempton, Albion, had to drive to another state after learning Michigan had a five-day waiting law. They had gone to Detroit to pick up a new car, a gift from her parents. The young couple had planned to be married there secretly, because in 1936 a married lady could not hold a teaching position, Ruth writes.

They had to marry immediately because they both were scheduled to attend summer school at the University of Idaho. Halfway through the paperwork she says, they learned Indiana was the closest state where they could wed that day.

After arriving in South Bend at noon they were married in the parlor of a Christian lady minister.

She must have tied the knot securely because Ruth notes the bridegroom was LDS and the bride Methodist. In June the Kemptons will mark their 53rd anniversary.

Wedding is beginning of 4 busy decades

By LORAYNE ORTON SMITH
Times-News writer

JEROME —The wedding day of Vernon and Olivine Kendall was an extremely busy day 40 years ago, the forerunner of four busy decades of ministry and sharing.

Their story will give heart to prospective bridal couples who feel harried as the big day approaches, showing that no matter how much there is to do before the ceremony, one always does make it.

Kendall, a retired pastor of the Jerome First Baptist Church, was serving as a summer intern at the Community Baptist Church in Arco. His wedding, on a Sunday, was the final event of their summer there.

Besides getting ready for his own wedding, the young intern had a few other duties, he writes. It was the kind of Sunday clergymen of all faiths can appreciate.

After playing the piano for the Sunday school opening exercise he taught the adult class. In the worship service, he directed the choir and Olivine sang a solo during the anthem. He also preached the morning sermon.

At 1:30 p.m. there was a funeral service in the church, which filled the sanctuary and an overflow room. The young intern was asked to sing three solos for this.

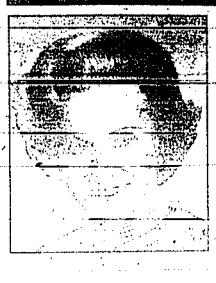

Holding funerals on Sunday seems strange, but Kendall had the explanation.

Arco was just a little cowtown back in 1948, before the national reactor testing station was built, he said. "I guess Sunday was the only day they could get the cowboys rounded up to attend a service."

After the funeral, while the head pastor was at the cemetery, Kendall put on old clothes and swept

How to addresss prospective in-laws often overlooked

Joan Bean

TWIN FALLS — An engaged couple often considers important details of their upcoming life together, such as: where they will live, their china pattern and who will put out the garbage.

One thing they rarely think of — much less talk about — is what to call their respective parents-in-law.

With so many other things to think about, it's small wonder this matter is so often overlooked. It's easy to put off naming the in-laws until later. Easier said than done.

Until recently, Bud and Beverly were a case in point. A phone call to Bev's mother-in-law went something like this.

"Hello."

"Hi...This is Beverly. I was wondering if you and Bud's Dad would like to come over for dinner tomorrow night?"

"Sounds good to me, but I'd better make sure Bud's Dad doesn't have a commitment."

"Okay, give me a call after you talk to him. Bye now."

It is easier, by far, to handle the no-name situation over the phone, than in person. Then it can be a real problem, especially when the need arises to ask a question of a mother-in-law in motion, or who has her back turned, or is already engaged in a conversation with other guests.

At those times, Beverly needed direct eye contact with her mother-in-law, and she tried to make herself noticed as best she could, while stifling the urge to shout: "Hey, you over there — whoever you are — did you bring the extra chairs?"

At times such as this, because she could not address Bud's mother by name, Bev found it necessary to put herself within her mother-in-law's field of vision in order to gain her attention. This was not easy when other people were in the way.

She knew that jumping up and down, frantically waving her arms, would be socially unacceptable — as would be loud throat clearing, followed by foot stomping or a shrill whistle. Holding her breath and turning blue was always a possibility, but only in an emergency.

When faced with one of these situations, she so very much wished she had a name for this person — the mother of her husband, the wife of his father (another nameless person). She had just about come to the point of simply ASKING her husband's parents what they would like to be called.

But after 15 years it seemed sort of silly.

Beverly was not the only one who had a problem with this. So did her in-laws, Marv and Marge were as uncomfortable with the whole thing as she was — and just as stumped as to what to do about it.

Margo, who had to deal with it more often than Marv, wished she had cleared this up many years ago. She figures the younger woman probably felt it disrespectful to call her by her given name, even though the two had become good friends. And, at the same time, "Mom" might be a name reserved for Bev's own mother.

Understanding all this, she too skirted the issue in their conversations.

"Where would you like Bud's Dad and I to sit?"

"Why don't The Two of You sit over here, Bud — please pull the chair out for Your Mom."

"Thanks Bev. Everything looks so good. Bud's Dad and I are always bragging about what a good cook you are."

Seated around a table it was not difficult to make eye contact. Marge could refer to Marv as "he" or "him" and give a little nod in his direction as she talked to her daughter-in-law. Beverly followed suit, throwing in a "Bud's Dad" only sporadically.

Then, not long ago, at the end of one such evening, in the midst of the goodbyes at the door and as her in-laws headed toward their car, Beverly cleared her throat and waved in the direction. This did not work, because their backs were turned, so she pulled on both corners of her mouth and took a deep breath. But, before she let go with an attention-getting, ear- piercing whistle, she exhaled, paused for a moment and shouted:

"Marge, Marv! You forgot your chairs."

Last-minute jitters is normal reaction

By The Associated Press

You're getting married in a month or two and you find yourself daydreaming about all the things that might go wrong at the wedding and in the marriage. Does this mean you should call the whole thing off?

No, say two authorities who have talked to many brides and grooms. Jerilynn Ross, president of the Phobia Society of America, says that it's normal and appropriate to worry about the unknown.

Cele Lalli, editor of Modern Bride, sees the realization of potential conflict as a sign of maturity in the age of divorce. Both say it isn't the worries you should worry about, but what you do about them.

In a recent seminar she conducted for Bride's, Ross noticed both brides and grooms-to-be had more fears than they realized and hadn't discussed them.

"Merely learning that others worried about similar fears made the participants feel better because they had felt their worries were unique. In many instances, the partner was surprised to learn of the fears," she says.

This observation led her to conclude that communicating worries may be all that's needed to relieve them. "Even if you need to go a third person such as a therapist or religious leader to get the worry out, it's best to reveal it," says the psychologist who counsels at Roundhouse Square Phobia Treatment Center in Alexandria, Va.

Lalli says that because couples getting married now are generally older than couples in the recent past, there are more potential wedding conflicts between them and the way their parents do things. She sees this as a plus, not a drawback.

Ross characterized most worries of couples about to be married as normal worries about the future.

out the building and set up for his own 4 o'clock wedding, with the help of some of the church women.

Their work was interrupted by a call for help from the women in charge of the Kendell's wedding reception. Since there was no bakery in Arco, the three-tiered wedding cake came from Blackfoot on a public bus over a road filled with chuckholes.

When the women opened the box, they discovered the top two layers had slid off and were leaning against the side of the box.

"We removed the top layers, built a platform of dry bread crusts to support them," Kendall writes. "Frosting and cake were scraped from the box and plastered back on the side of the cake where guests would not see it from the front."

With all this commotion over reconstructing the cake, time got away from the bridegroom. He thought he had adequate time to change from work clothes into his suit, only to realize as he came from his basement room that it was exactly THEE hour of 4 o'clock.

He rang the church bell and went to a room at the back of the sanctuary where he met his bride. From there they both sang solos, then marched down the aisle of the crowded church as if they had been sitting waiting all day for the ceremony to start.

After they took the traditional first bite of cake, the reception assistants discreetly cut out the damaged quarter and got rid of it.

When the newlyweds were ready to leave, the pastor jokingly asked Kendall if he wouldn't like to stick around and conduct the evening service.

"I declined the offer," Kendall writes. "And we drove away to begin 40 years which have been about as busy and happy as the one when our marriage began on that August day in 1948."

Colorful gowns newest trend

By LORAYNE ORTON SMITH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — This year hot pink is a popular color for wedding gowns and bright red and even black are seen frequently, according to a national wedding consultant who visited Twin Falls earlier this month.

These bright, and different, colors are not replacing the traditional white bridal dress, says Anita Scheunert of Wedding World International. But, even though traditional weddings have been in for some years, there is increasing acceptance of these non-traditional colors.

Scheunert and Mary Paradise of the Milwaukee-based wedding consultant firm, conducted a bridal planning seminar at the Magic Valley Mall.

The current trend for bridesmaid dresses, Scheunert says, is for floral patterns such as white background with green and peach shades. But pink and lavender are still popular color for attendants' garb.

Recently the Wedding World personnel got a call from a prospective bridegroom in New York City complaining that his bride wants to wear a black dress for their wedding and she wants him to wear a white tuxedo with long tails.

"We told him not to complain — that it was very fashionable," Scheunert says. "Black and white are very in for formal, classic weddings."

The consultant says some of the most commonly asked questions by brides, in cities large and small, concern how to handle divorced parents who may not be speaking to each other.

The consultants urge parents to forget their own differences for their son's or daughter's big day.

Another trend the consultant sees in her travels throughout the country is that receiving lines are often held at the reception hall instead of at the church or site of the ceremony.

While church weddings still predominate, in big cities many other sites are used for bridal ceremonies, Scheunert says.

"We see weddings being held in zoos, and in Milwaukee one couple exchanged vows atop a 1,000 foot wedding cake during the city's ice festival," the consultant says.

Brides often ask how much they should spend on flowers and Scheunert has a ready answer.

"It's 15 percent of the total reception cost. If the wedding dinner, or reception, costs $1,000, then $150 is a reasonable floral bill."

At receptions, disc jockeys are as popular as bands, Scheunert says, and balloons are popular not only at receptions, but in churches also.

"They can be used in arches, carrying out the colors of the wedding decor," she says.

Limousines are often used by bridal couples in metropolitan areas as an elegant means of transportation from the church to the reception site. Some limousine companies even offer non-alcohol drinks and "Just Married" signs as extra services.

Making a wedding perfect takes time

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Special to The Times-News

What makes a wedding perfect?

I think it's one that is everything the bride and groom want it to be — with the understanding that they take time to explore not only what they want, but how to get it.

Men and women marry at an older age today. They still fall in love in their teens, but they wisely choose to wait until their careers are established before they make it legal.

Many are marrying in their mid- to late 20s rather than immediately upon graduation from high school or college. This means the bride and the groom are likely to be more involved in the "planning and paying" stages of a wedding than couples were in the past. No longer is the bride's family expected to shoulder the full financial burden. (Hooray — it's about time!)

Second, because most brides and grooms work and see themselves as equal partners, yet another social phenomenon is occurring — many grooms expect to be more involved in every stage of the wedding plans.

Today's groom is a "new man," someone whose personal life is just as important to him as his career — and he has no intention of sitting on the sidelines while the planning of the most significant event of his life is under way. Brides need to know that!

And finally — but just as critical — is the impact divorce has on weddings. From the sheer weight of my mailbags I can tell you that confusion reigns as brides and grooms try to stage lovely, happy events involving all the parents, grandparents and stepparents and other "blended family" members, yet avoid any hurt feelings.

Fulfilling great expectations, then, takes on an added meaning, doesn't it? It means planning the details of your wedding day to reflect the personalities and personal histories of you, your families, and your friends.

The perfect wedding is possible, all right. But it "happens" when the bridal couple knows just how to mix practical detail with the emotional insights and special kindnesses that will make their wedding memorable for its warmth and love and happiness.

Sound like a challenge? It is — but fun, too. All it requires is planning and organization. And where better to begin than with a short list of what to avoid.

HONEST ERRORS

— Honest Error 1: The Forgotten Father. This is the guy who wants the best for everyone, whether he's the bride's father or the groom's father, yet he is often the last to be asked about his expectations for this wonderful event.

Only after the plans have been laid is he included — and then it's for bills to be paid. Too late, guys.

Put Dad at the top of the list of people to be consulted from the very beginning. One bride's father's only contribution to the wedding was, "Just get married by the end of the year to file joint tax returns." Good advice.

— Honest Error 2: The Misunderstood Mom. Once instructed to be the guardian of family traditions, wedding and otherwise, today's mother of the bride is now likely to find herself at the mercy of new social situations that lead only to confusion and conflict.

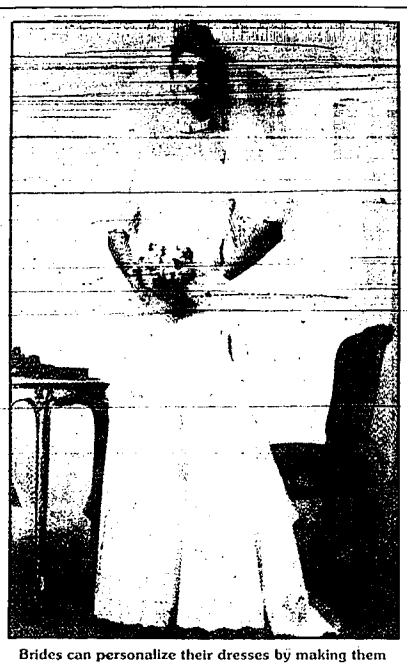

The important thing to remember about that "confusion" is this: It signals that a new solution is just around the corner. Believe me, nothing *is seen more often in today's wed*dings than new solutions. So settle in with your daughter and study the options together.

— Honest Error 3: Short Shrift for the In-Laws. This can happen so easily — forgetting to include the groom's parents as ideas are tossed around in the early stages of planning.

Be sure to take time to consider the expectations of these "terrific parents" as wedding plans fall into place.

— Honest Error 4: The Bride's Wish Is Everyone's Command. Sorry, kiddo. The '70s and '80s may have raised our social acceptance level of couples living together without marriage, but it happens to have worked both ways. Woe is the woman who neglects to run the planning chart past her husband-to-be. What if you want to polka but he wants jazz, you want it low-key and he wants pizzazz?

Like Cinderella at the once-in-a-lifetime ball, the bride-to-be often envisions herself in a fantasy gown.

What trends might the bride-to-be look for in 1989?

"There's a movement towards individualizing a bridal gown," says Cindy Rose, fashion director at a major pattern company.

The newest details draw attention above the waist. While off-the-shoulder, bare sweetheart necklines are the most popular, sheer fabrics offer a modest approach. Bows and rosettes continue as romantic embellishments at the shoulder, waistline and wrist.

Other trends to watch for are tinted bridal gowns in pale petal pink, Victorian styling complete with slimmer "bustled" skirts, and mixing matte and shiny fabrics to create visual interest.

For the bridal party, all white "snowball" weddings, black or black and white dresses (which later can be used for formal events), and floral prints reminiscent of garden parties are the strong themes. Mothers of the bride often opt for lace and silky combinations.

A brand-new bridal brochure with details and tips on everything you need to know to create the dress of your dreams is available from The Sewing Fashion Council. Childcare seminar planned

TWIN FALLS — A day-long seminar on "Providing Quality Childcare" will be held Friday at the College of Southern Idaho.

The session is being co-sponsored by CSI, the Snake River Association for the Education of Young Children and the Greater Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce. It opens at 9 a.m. in the Aspen Building mini-auditorium with the first discussion focusing on state and national legislation affecting childcare in Idaho. This will be followed by a national teleconference from 10 to 11:30 a.m.

During the lunch there will be a discussion on services needed by users of childcare. Afternoon workshops will focus on "Why Provide Childcare?" "What is Quality Childcare?" and "Training Available for Childcare Providers."

Fee for the workshop is $25, which includes lunch. Those interested should pre-register with the CSI Continuing Education Department, 734-0269.

Solitaire is popular style for engagement

The solitaire, or single-diamond ring, is the most popular style of engagement ring, says Lloyd Jaffe, chairman of the American Diamond Industry Association.

Thirty-seven percent of the rings received by newly-engaged women last year had two or more diamonds, he says.

Jaffe says that there were an estimated 2,410,000 marriages last year and 75 percent of the brides received a diamond engagement ring.

Book florist right after date is set

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Special to The Times-News

Flowers. My favorite subject. Now there's an item that can really run up the bill on your wedding.

As you plan your ceremony, check to see what flowers, if any, are allowed. Often, only the altar and aisle posts are decorated. On the other hand, for the reception you can usually do as much as your budget allows — but book that florist immediately upon setting your wedding date.

If you're on a very tight budget, you may want to consider doing the flowers yourself (with the help of an artistic friend who will undertake the physical work and set it all up on your wedding day) or encouraging friends to make them a wedding gift.

A thought for the bride who is marrying for the second time: If your celebration will be a quiet family affair, why not consider silk flowers? A stunning arrangement in a silver bowl for the ceremony — and one or two long-stemmed beauties to be carried by you — will add a stylish note to your wedding and become a lasting memento as well as part of your home.

The time to talk flowers is also the time to talk rice. A traditional "decoration" of the bridal pair, rice has fallen into disuse because it leaves marks on good wooden floors, is difficult to clean up from sidewalks, is easy to slip on and isn't considered a good diet for birds. My suggestion? Birdseed. It feels the same on the bridal brow, ruffles few feathers among the clergy who are protective of their premises, and is a treat for the local fowl.

Traditional cakes make way for favorites

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Special to The Times-News

Like weddings, which are no longer decreed by tradition, wedding cakes now come in many different shapes, sizes and colors.

The traditional tiered white cake has given way to delicious concoctions of chocolate cake, carrot cake, poundcake — whatever you love — decorated with pastel touches on the white icing or gracefully strewn with real flowers.

Some weddings have a "groom's cake," too, which is a dark fruitcake, cut and boxed, for guests to take home. Wedding lore says the unmarried might sleep with this under their pillow and hope to dream of the person they may marry.

If you have been married before, your cake should be ever so slightly more conservative — that means dispense with a fancy bride and groom on the top tier. It does not mean go short on confection.

The cutting of the cake takes place after the bridal party has finished eating. The bride goes to the small cake table. The groom stands to her right, the groomsmen to both sides of them. Using a beribboned silver cake knife, the bride cuts the first piece from the bottom tier — and she and the groom share it — politely offering each other bite-sized morsels. Then the cake is served to the guests.

Here's what you should do when planning your wedding cake:

— Choose your baker. This may be the person catering the reception, or the caterer may recommend a baker. Don't hesitate to show the baker some pictures of cakes that interest you. Decide on the type and size and cost of the cake.

— One month before your wedding, re-confirm the cake plans, and date and time of arrival. Check, too, who will be accepting the cake and making payment. Are there any special instructions for the handling and cutting of the cake?

— Be sure you have a proper cake knife. It's usually a special silver cake knife that can be used for cakes on birthdays and other family events.

— Check with family and friends to see if you have any special cake traditions, such as the groom's cake or the freezing of a section of your cake for the future.

Choose music that will not distract from ceremony

By The Associated Press

With wedding ceremonies as varied as they are these days, walking down the aisle to a different drummer can be a most creative experience.

The American Music Conference has some ideas to consider when planning music for the nuptial rites:

— If the wedding is in a religious setting, be sure to check with the clergy or music director to determine what types of music are allowed.

— If a music advisor or wedding planner is not available, talk to friends involved in music, or music students at a local college.

— Resist the temptation to choose musical selections only because you like them; the music should not distract from the ceremony, no matter how beautiful or entertaining.

— If you choose a traditional wedding selection, like Wagner's "Bridal Chorus" or Mendelsohn's "Wedding March," consider a non-traditional grouping of instruments. Guitars, string ensembles or electronic instruments can offer a different approach.

— To personalize the ceremony, ask friends who can sing or play musical instruments well to participate. (However, if family and friends aren't musical, paying for the performance is worthwhile.)

— Keep the music program simple. Experimentation is best left to another time.

Lorayne O. Smith Spotlight

Dozens — perhaps hundreds — of Magic Valley residents are working on projects and activities for Idaho's Centennial in 1990, including the enthusiastic Jerome committee which shared its plans with media representatives this week.

Pam Smith, chairman, has the pleasant task of coordinating a large group of people already deeply involved in lasting legacy projects such as the Idaho Living History Agricultural museum.

The Jerome County Historical Society has been working on the project for many months and ground will be broken at the site at the intersection of Highway 93 and Interstate 84 this spring, Norene Andrus reported.

Other projects include preparation of a guide booklet for a scenic 30-mile drive through the county under leadership of Scott Zimmerman, planting of trees in all of the three towns in the county and a 99th birthday party July 4 for all Jerome county residents.

Jerome and Camas County high schools took top honors in their divisions during Boise State University's annual Science Competition Day.

The Jerome team, comprised of Josh Hodge, Chris Rasch and Neil Fox, was the overall winning team for medium schools. Fox also earned a $6,000 scholarship for four years of science or math study at BSU. Hodge won honors in physics.

Benjamin Rast of Camas County High School, Fairfield, was the small-school division winner of a $6,000 scholarship to BSU.

The Camas team of Rast and Andy Frostenson won honors in geology. David Knowlton, another Camas student, was individual winner in physics and Frostenson took individual honors in geology.

The Lincoln School PTA in Twin Falls has raised more than $8,100 for the school in the recent spell-a-thon.

Katie Eisenhauer, a second grader, received a computer as grand prize winner. Kari Eisenhauer, winner in the kindergarten group, received a dual cassette AM/FM stereo.

Brandi Lee, first grader, chose a scooter as winner of the first and second grades. April Ahrendson, fourth grader, chose the Sega system as her prize.

Together, these four girls raised just under $1,000. The remainder was obtained by other students through pledges for the spell-a-thon, says Judy Eisenhauer, chairman of the PTA spell-a-thon project.

Magic Valley members of the Idaho Oldtime Fiddlers brought toe-tapping music to the Nevada prison camp near Wells recently. The fiddlers were playing at their annual engagement at the Ranch House in Wells and were invited by John Stricklan, prison official, to visit the camp where prisoners soon to be released are stationed.

The North Side Bus Co., Jerome, furnished transportation for the 28 musicians from throughout the state. Area fiddlers participating were George and Ruth Drown, Gary and Mary Lee Huntington, Tim and Kathy Collett and Edna Ford, all of Buhl; Cliff and Betty Haak, Filer; Janie Roman and Helen Mort, both Kimberly, and Margie Collins, Bill Morse, Max Harkness and Archie and Sally Turner, all of Twin Falls.

The Times-News welcomes items about area residents who receive honors or recognition. Send material to Times-News Spotlight Column, Box 548, Twin Falls, Idaho 83303, in care of Lorayne O. Smith.

College break no holiday for parents

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: We recently sent our 18-year-old daughter back to college after two weeks at home for her holiday break. She is a lovely girl, but since she's gone away to college we are having problems over our house rules.

There are no curfew rules at her dormitory, so she's used to staying out as late as she wishes. When she's home, we expect her to be home by 1 a.m. She cannot understand that, and says if we trust her enough to let her go out of town to college, we should trust her to stay out as late as she wishes when she's home.

My husband and I feel that it's not a matter of trust. If she wants all the freedom of being an adult, she should accept all the responsibilities that go with it — such as supporting herself and paying her own way through college. We feel that as long as she is being supported by us and living in our home, she should obey the house rules.

What do you think, Abby? Are we behind the times?

— FRUSTRATED IN MINNESOTA

DEAR FRUSTRATED. No. I think and have stated repeatedly that a person of any age who lives at home rent-free must live according to the house rules.

One father of teen-agers wrote to say that he had the following sign posted in his home:

YOUNG ADULTS AND TEENAGERS: IF YOU ARE TIRED OF BEING HASSLED BY UNREASONABLE PARENTS, NOW IS THE TIME FOR ACTION: LEAVE HOME AND PAY YOUR OWN WAY WHILE YOU STILL KNOW EVERYTHING!

DEAR ABBY: Because you are always encouraging your readers to read, I am sending you this piece I wrote about the joys of reading. It may arouse the curiosity of those people who do not read, awaken the possibility of a form of escapism, and result in happiness. I hope so. And I hope you think its worth using.

—TOBI GRUBER

DEAR TOBI: I do. And here it is:

A FORCE TO BE RECKONED WITH

I am full of wisdom, humor, tears, passion and love. I am that which is held tightly to the breast, lightly on the lap, peered at, sighed over and remembered. I bring you foolish fancies; I bring friendship to the lonely. I take you with me to the far reaches of the earth from India to China; to Mars, to Venus, and probe into the habits of chimpanzees.

I reach into your mind; I show you things that are unbelievable and make you believe them. You must treasure me, protect me: I give you a knowledge of life you never dreamed of. Don't desecrate me; I fill the empty places of your life. I give myself to you gladly; seek me out and find me. I am a BOOK.

The facts about drugs, AIDS and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

Plan ahead to make moving less of a chore

By The Associated Press

One effect of marrying later is that each partner is likely to have been living independently. Marriage is therefore not merely a merger of two people; it's also the combination of two sets of household effects.

Moving two people into one home is far from an effortless endeavor. But you'll accomplish the feat more easily if you plan ahead, make lists — and learn how to pack and load a truck.

According to Joann Alencikas, manager of customer services at Ryder Truck Rental, it's wise to start about four weeks ahead of time to organize the details of the move. Even those hiring a mover should make an inventory of what they each have. The list can be used to plan what to get rid of, what new items are needed and finally to estimate the size truck required to move belongings.

Those renting a truck should reserve it well in advance. During busy summer weekends, the peak period of demand, a month is not too long. At other times, a week or two is usually sufficient.

When making a reservation, be prepared with a list of what you need to move so you can get the right size truck. Rental trucks range in size from a 10-footer with 295 cubic feet or room for one roomful of belongings to a 24-footer for seven rooms of furnishings. A 15-foot van provides about 750 cubic feet of storage or three to four rooms of furnishings.

The majority of moves in the United States are do-it-yourself moves, according to Alencikas, primarily because of cost savings. As an example, she says, it might cost about $420 to rent a 15-foot van for a one-way move from New York to Boston, compared to about $1,000 based on standard tariffs discounted at 30 percent for the same move via a van line.

Two to four weeks ahead of time, make an inventory and start to pack and label possessions; close and open charge and bank accounts; turn utilities on and off, and notify the old and new post offices of your new address.

Two weeks before the move, it's time to start packing.

On moving day, it's time to start loading the truck.

Some tips: Load the truck one-quarter at a time, solid from floor to ceiling. Tie off each quarter with sturdy rope. Don't leave any open spaces since a tight fit keeps the load from shifting and protects goods from breakage. Fill in spaces with small boxes. Load the heaviest items, such as major appliances, first.

Timely gift

By The Associated Press

Clocks rank high as a contemporary gift for young marrieds, says Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's magazine.

"Clocks are great, memorable gifts which help newlyweds avoid friction during those sensitive first few years," she says.

"They enable them to better synchronize the rhythm of their new life together."

Buying stemware can be confusing

By The Associated Press

Crystal stemware and weddings are intrinsically linked, whether in festive table settings or in wedding gifts. However, selecting the right stemware from the many sizes and shapes available can seem complicated.

Typically, a manufacturer might offer as many as nine different kinds of stemware in each of its pat terns. They are (in descending order of size) the water goblet, burgundy, white wine, hock, sherry and cordial. In addition, the champagne flute or saucer-shaped champagne coupe and the brandy snifter are often also part of the set.

Only three sizes are necessary to complete a basic stemware place setting: a water goblet, an all-purpose wine glass and a champagne flute.

Nice additions to the basic three are the cordial glass and the brandy snifter. Since these latter two normally are used after the meal, they do not have to match the principal stemware pattern.

Don't think of the norms as rules, however, says Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's magazine, because almost any glass can be used for any occasion. She offers these guide lines: for maximum enjoyment of wine, choose a glass with a clear bowl generous enough to hold at last four ounces of wine. Select a gracefully-shaped glass to present a pleasing appearance on the table, that is comfortable to hold.

*The key to getting maximum en*joyment from your crystal, however many pieces you may have, is to use it for a variety of beverages and food.

For example, Claude Loisel, president of Cristalleries de Saint-Louis, says the water goblet can also be used for iced tea, soda and juice. It can even hold red wine, if a very large glass is desired.

Wine glasses are the most diverse of all crystal, since they vary in size and shape according to the type of wine to be served. When only one size is purchased, normally it will be the burgundy glass which can be used for red and white wines.

A purist (or one with a larger budget and bigger crystal cabinet) may choose two wine glasses: the burgundy and white wine.

The former is usually large enough to be filled only a third full to allow room for swirling the wine to enjoy its full flavor. The white wine glass typically has a smaller bowl and taller stem. The extended stem prevents the warmth of one's hand from reaching the wine and thereby destroying its crisp flavor.

The champagne glass is particularly useful, since champagne figures prominently at life's celebrations. Nowadays, the saucer-shaped bowl that used to be popular has been superseded by the flute (known as a tulip when the rim cur ves slightly inward). The elongated shape and narrow mouth prevent champagne bubbles from dissipating too rapidly.

Pay close attention to how intentions are announced

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Special to The Times-News

AP Laserphoto

Use the same style stationery for all correspondence

Your invitations and thank-you notes tell more about you, your fiance and your wedding than you might imagine. Within seconds of receiving your invitation, the recipient knows exactly what kind of people you are. That's why I say to every bride and groom: Pay close attention to how you announce your intentions. Opt for class — not flash.

To begin, plan to use the same style stationery for everything. Whether it's for carefully worded, elegant invitations (engraved or hand-written) or for thank-you notes, paper and style always should be identical. The stationery store of your choice will have someone who can help you select the most appropriate paper, type and wording.

I can, however, underscore some basic rules that apply to all wedding invitations:

1. Know the exact number of guests to be invited. You have just one opportunity to place the order for your invitations to receive them in time.

The guest list should be split equally between the bride and groom, with their lists drawn up before those of other family members. Give special thought to inviting the parents of the members of your bridal party and relatives who will not be able to attend but would treasure the invitation. Do not invite casual acquaintances or co-workers unless you enjoy a personal friendship outside the office.

2. Order your invitations at least three months in advance so you have plenty of time to address the envelopes and receive your responses from your guests.

Please note that every word is written out on an invitation — that means no abbreviations. Each guest is addressed with their full name and address, including the word "street."

Send your wedding invitations four to six weeks ahead of time, with the request that each guest "RSVP" (which in French means "repondez s'il vous plait" and in plain English means, "Please let me know whether or not you plan to attend"). Each invitation should included a self-addressed, stamped envelope for the response. Should you not have a response by two weeks before your wedding date, telephone those from whom you have not heard to see "if your invitation was received."

Some people are careless, others incurable procrastinators, and there are those rare instances when an invitation goes astray. This occurs infrequently, but it has happened.

Also, if you choose an enclosure card for the RSVP that says simply "Please Reply" and provides space for the names, then be prepared for some absent-minded folks to write only "We're coming!" or "Sorry, can't make it!" — with no name attached. To save time and frustration, lightly pencil a number inside the envelope flap for the enclosure card, that matches the guest's name on your list. That gives you an instant reference. That also underscores the vital importance of keeping lists (and copies of lists) of every detail of your wedding plans.

3. To do this, make a wedding invitation list. This should have enough space for a master list on which to record — by number — those to whom you have sent invitations, their responses, and the total number of guests attending the wedding and/or the reception. If your guest list is limited for any reason, you may want to send announcements of your marriage, to be mailed as soon after the wedding as possible.

If your guest list numbers more than 90, I recommend using a separate notebook for both the guest and gift lists. Make copies periodically and tuck them into a safe place so nothing is ever lost.

4. Order at least 12 extra invitations for last-minute guests and to keep as mementos.

5. I heartily recommend performing this "clerical" chore together. Grooms should be encouraged to take part in the preparations.

Divorce can add new dilemma for invitations

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Special to The Times-News

A dilemma encountered by many divorced people and older men and women whose parents may be deceased or will not be involved with wedding plans is whether or not parents' names should be included on invitations. It is certainly acceptable for a bride to say:

The honour of your presence is requested at the marriage of (or "wedding reception of") Mrs. Amanda Blake and Mr. James Maple, etc.

Once upon a time, etiquette decreed that a divorced woman could not send engraved invitations to her wedding ceremony. I say, why not? That is really old hat! With so many "second-timers," I think that old rule deserves to be discarded.

You have two options. Generally, all the invitations and announcements are in the name of the parent with whom the bride is living — that's usually the mother. Let's assume, too, that your mother is remarried. Your invitation should read:

Mrs. Margaret Mason requests the honour of your presence at the marriage of her daughter Amanda (etc.) ....

However, I prefer a different form, which I recently saw for the first time. The parents of the bride and groom were divorced and remarried. Both families were helping the bride and groom with expenses, although the bridal pair was paying for half of the wedding themselves. They wrote:

Together with their parents Amanda Blake and James Maple request the honour of your presence at their marriage (etc.).

Black becomes popular color for brides

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Special to The Times-News

You don't believe me that a bride would want to wear black? Check it out:

DEAR ABBY: My problem may seem rather odd, and you'll probably think I'm weird, but here goes: I am going to be married soon and I have already designed my wedding gown and plan to make it myself. It's going to be black lace and taffeta. I've told only a few people and have already been ridiculed, asked if I was "crazy," and I was even accused of being a Satan worshiper. I am not. I believe in God, I just happen to like black.

I know from history that white was not always the traditional color for brides. In our culture black is worn by mourners, but I am not superstitious. In other cultures, white is worn for mourning, so why not black for weddings?

I have had only one positive reaction from a friend who heard I was going to be married in black. She said, "It figures. You always were different."

I would appreciate your opinion.

— DIFFERENT IN INDIANA

DEAR DIFFERENT: What does your fiance think? His is the only opinion you need. If he has no objection, go with the black and good luck.

That letter — and my answer — shows you how the rules have changed for today's brides.

And just in case you think I'm a little weird supporting a bride who wants to wear black, hold your horses! Here's a second opinion from a wedding expert with impeccable credentials:

DEAR ABBY: I have read with great interest the controversy surrounding white weddings in your column and applaud the encouragement you have given women who see their weddings as a celebration of their faith in the future, not an apology for the past (even if they have been living with their fiances).

White has been a color of joy since Roman times. Traditionally, ceremonial robes have often been richly colored; whether they were peasant costumes or gold-embroidered kimonos.

During the Middle Ages red was the favored color, and it still is the color chosen by Hindu, Islamic and Chinese brides.

The white wedding dress is a fairly recent tradition. Victorian brides from privileged backgrounds wore white to indicate that they were rich enough to wear a dress for one day only — but still the majority at that time wore their best finery. We who now live well into our 80's (as opposed to our 50's in 1900) must also develop a more tolerant view of the needs of people who, like half of all U.S. citizens, will probably divorce and remarry in their lifetime. Their sincere efforts to begin again should be supported by the community they seek to join. In unity there is harmony, and color should not bar the way.

Add a personal touch to the wedding

By The Associated Press

When Aimee Gauthier and Mike Reed wed last fall in Stamford, Conn., her hobby of collecting 1930s and 1940s tableware and vintage tablecloths and napkins occupied center stage.

The tables holding the wedding feast were covered with the tablecloths and set with her mixed collection of colorful Depression glass and Fiestaware. The menu consisted mainly of food made by the bride.

It was a prime example of couples planning their wedding as a very personal event.

Gauthier-Reed says colorful tables are conducive to a festive atmosphere. Though unassuming and not normally for a formal table, the settings were a delightful surprise to guests at her wedding, she says.

Gauthier-Reed, a 25-year-old graphic artist, says she learned some of her stylish ways by working as an assistant to Martha Stewart, the food stylist and author of books on party-giving, including "Weddings."

She put Stewart's lessons on color to use at her own wedding to create a relatively inexpensive event that was nevertheless original.

The menu included a salad of thinly-sliced filet of beef and red and yellow peppers, carrots and snow peas in vinaigrette dressing.

So pleased was she with the wedding and the enjoyment she got out of using her rapidly-enlarging collection of dinnerware and tablecloths from the 1930s and early '40s that she decided the experience held the seeds of a new business idea.

She has launched a business renting the pieces to others for parties and special occasions.

Though her new business is unusual, it is not unique, she says. She came across the idea in California where it appears to have originated.

"I realized this business could be the perfect solution. I would earn money to support our collecting and, after renting it out, I'd get the whole collection back at the end of the day," she says.

Filer's Marc Lutz beats Declo's Jay Hamilton to the hoop

Filer wins district

Wildcats get by Declo Hornets, 65-63

By RON GATES
Times-News writer

WENDELL — For the second time in as many nights, the District 4 Class A-3 boys' basketball tournament hung in the balance until the final seconds Saturday night.

This time Filer senior guard Steve McCandless picked up the challenge, connecting on four free throws over the final 31 seconds to help the Wildcats dethrone Declo 65-63.

"It all came down to the last possessions," said a relieved Filer coach LaRell Patterson. "Last night they were theirs, but tonight's belonged to us."

Trailing 47-42 as the fourth period began the Hornets chipped away at Filer's lead, finally pulling with one, at 59-58, on Jeff Steadman's charity with 3-minutes, 3-seconds left to play. A minute-and-a-half later Steadman's foul line jumper tied the contest at 61.

Declo had the opportunity to forge ahead at the one-minute mark following a McCandless miss, but turned the ball back on a rally ending 5-second violation, thus setting the stage for the finale.

"We'll take that anytime," said Patterson of his opponent's choice to foul late. "He's been our pressure man all along."

Landry out as Cowboys coach

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
The Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Tom Landry's career as the only coach the Dallas Cowboys had in 29 years ended Saturday night when an Arkansas millionaire bought the team and made University of Miami's Jimmy Johnson the head coach.

Team owner H.R. "Bum" Bright announced that the Cowboys had been sold to Jerry Jones, a longtime friend of Johnson. Bright said Jones, of Little Rock, Ark., "will be the most enthusiastic owner that the Cowboys have ever had."

Landry, 64, who took over the Cowboys when they were a ragged expansion team in 1960 and led them to the Super Bowl five times, was the major victim when H.R. "Bum" Bright sold the team to Jones, a 46-year-old Little Rock, Ark., oilman, for an estimated $140 million.

"Tom Landry is the Cowboys, and just like Tex is the Cowboys. And we'll have to address that at a later date," Jones said. "But let me tell you this, Jimmy Johnson would be the first to tell you he couldn't carry Tom's water bucket."

Jones said Johnson returned to Miami on Saturday and had not made any decisions about his Cowboys assistants yet.

Announcement of the sale, rumored since Thursday, came at a news conference that began at 8:22 p.m. CST Saturday at the Cowboys' Valley Ranch headquarters about 25 miles northeast of Dallas.

The news conference was scheduled to have begun at 7 p.m., but was delayed because Jones and club president Tex Schramm flew in Jones' private jet to Austin to inform Landry personally that he was being replaced as Cowboys coach.

Schramm's voice broke and tears welled in his eyes as he talked of the visit with Landry. "It was a very difficult meeting, difficult and sad," said Schramm.

Minico's Eric Miller, left, gives a flying hug to teammate Dan Poulton after they beat Mountain Home on Saturday

Minico gains trip to state A-1 tournament

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

JEROME — The first 17 points of the fourth quarter were more than enough to assure the Minico Spartans of an 81-71 inter-regional playoff victory over Mountain Home Saturday afternoon and a trip to the state Class A-1 boys' basketball tournament opening Thursday in Boise.

Trailing 57-56, the Spartans opened with a Danny Poulton putback and then hit their next four shots. Free throws by Eric Miller and Poulton helped along and Jay Ennen wound it up with two follow shots that made it 73-57 before Brett McCabe ended Mountain Home's most fatal drought of the year.

The game, pitting the third-place team from Region II against the Region III runnerup, will send Minico to the 6:25 p.m. game against the Region I champion Moscow Thursday at the Boise State Pavilion.

Poulton paced the victory with 29 points and this win gives him at least two more games to seek the Minico High School career mark. The four-year Spartan starter is 29 points behind former Utah State star Jim Boatwright, who played several years professionally in Israel.

When Poulton started smoking, his father, Roger Poulton, top gun for Oakley a generation ago, was quitting. The elder Poulton had promised if Minico went to state, he'd give up the habit. When the game ended, Roger took his pack into the Spartan dressing room and gave them to his son.

"He's not getting them back," Danny promised.

Minico coach Craig Dexter, wrung out in the hot Jerome gymnasium and looking forward to his first round of golf immediately after returning to Rupert, took little credit for that explosion in the early fourth quarter.

"I think the situation said it," he said. "We were down one going into the fourth quarter, knowing this was what we'd be working toward all year. We had a bunch of seniors that wanted to go out with a trip to state."

If those five seniors were the Minico plus, then the four-junior, one-senior lineup Mountain Home used most of the time probably hurt.

As the Spartan streak continued, Mountain Home, which showed little offensive patience at any time, began forcing more and more shots — compounding the descrepancy showing up on the scoreboard.

"I thought late in the third quarter Mountain Home was killing us with the dribble penetration and living at the line. They made a lot of free throws. At the timeout we talked about playing defense the way we'd been taught and I felt it got a little better every time down the floor in the fourth quarter," Dexter said.

Mountain Home showed the athletic talent it was reputed to have, setting an early torrid pace and pretty much sticking with it.

The first half wound up dead even at 39.

After a very slow first three minutes of the third quarter, Travis Schow, with four points, and Poulton, with four more, hauled the Spartans into a 52-46 lead with 1 minutes, 52 seconds to play. But just as quickly Will Dix and McCabe started Mountain Home back and the Tigers took the lead at 57-56 just before the buzzer.

Bruno lasts 5 rounds

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson is back, a little rusty, a little chastened but very much in control.

"How dare they challenge me with their primitive skills," Tyson said after stopping Frank Bruno in the fifth round Saturday night and keeping Bruno from becoming the first British fighter to win the heavyweight championship in this century.

Tyson looked a bit primitive himself as he engaged in a mauling match with Bruno, a match that almost ended as soon as it began when Tyson knocked Bruno down with two right hands 14 seconds into the fight.

"I knew he wasn't hurt as badly as everybody thought," Tyson said. "I didn't hit him with a solid shot."

The champion also admitted that the thought crossed his mind that "it looks like it could be a long fight."

Bruno got up immediately and, as a crowd of more than 9,800 at the Las Vegas Hilton roared, took a mandatory eight-count from referee Richard Steele.

Bruno then fought well and just as dirty as Tyson until the end came with five seconds left in the fifth round.

"When fighters come to fight the heavyweight champion they automatically become a better fighter," Tyson said.

Bruno, however, lacked the arsenal to stay with one of the most menacing fighters in recent years.

In the fifth round, Tyson hurt Bruno badly with a right to the head, then had him reeling with a barrage of punches. Many missed, but many found their mark and it was obvious that Bruno's challenge was nearly at the end.

As the red lights on the corners blinked to signal there were 10 seconds left in the round, Bruno went to the ropes where Tyson unleashed a flurry of punches that included a crashing right uppercut and a left to the head. Bruno's manager leaped onto the apron to stop the fight. Steele beat him to it.

"It's great to be back and hear the crowd," Tyson said after returning to action for the first time since knocking out Michael Spinks in 91 seconds in June. This time he fought without a wife or trainer Kevin Rooney.

Worn-out Broncos still overpower ISU, 65-53

By SCOTT PEYRON
Special to The Times-News

BOISE — A sense of anticlimax was in the air, but Boise State fought through the aftermath of a showdown win over Idaho with defensive pressure and jolted Idaho State 65-53 in front of 11,872 at Pavilion Saturday night.

Boise State, which took over first place in the Big Sky Conference with a nationally televised win over the Vandals on this floor Thursday, exploded after an early second half technical foul. After forward Wilson Foster was whistled for a T after an exchange of elbows, Boise State broke off a 20-7 run and took control of a relatively even game that hadn't really seemed all that much trouble for the Broncos in the first place.

"It was hard to play," BSU center Brian Sperry said, touching on the wrung-out feeling he and his teammates had.

CSI men make it 30-1 for the season

By LARRY HOVEY

TWIN FALLS — Just plain awesome.

That's how the College of Southern Idaho's men's basketball team ended its season, whipping Snow's Badgers 111-49 in a Region 18 game Saturday to become only the second Golden Eagle team to win 30 games in a regular season.

"Your team is great," said Snow coach Larry Anderson when he met CSI's Fred Trenkle for the traditional post-game handshake.

Anderson said that not knowing whether he and his team will be called on to meet CSI at 6 p.m. Thursday in the first round of the postseason regional tournament. That will be determined by the results of Saturday's other games on the final night of the Region 18 regular season.

What the top-ranked CSI men, now 30-1, did was probably secure the No. 1 ranking in the final weekly National Junior College Athletic Association poll, which will be released Tuesday. Saturday's victory, along with a romping of Dixie Friday night, should be a warning that CSI is coming into postseason with all cylinders clicking.

Meanwhile, the CSI women thumped Snow 76-27 to claim a share of the regular season title with North Idaho — a 75-70 winner over Ricks in Coeur d'Alene Saturday night — with a 16-2 record. The CSI women will participate in the Region 18 tournament opening Friday in St. George, Utah, on the Dixie College campus.

"If you were going to critique this one you would have to get very nit-picky," said Trenkle as the congratulations rained down on him. "Our defense was outstanding against a team that scored 90 points on Dixie a week ago."

The stunning thing was the Eagles put a Wendy's night on the Badgers, that restaurant

Another one bites the dust: No. 7 Missouri upsets Oklahoma

College basketball

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — The long arm of Norm Stewart reached out to the seventh-ranked Missouri Tigers Saturday.

With Missouri one point behind top-ranked Oklahoma at halftime, the Missouri coach, who is recovering from cancer surgery at a Columbia hospital, used the intermission to telephone acting coach Rich Daly.

The Tigers then used a 18-2 run early in the second half to topple Oklahoma 97-84 in a Big Eight game behind Byron Irvin's 34 points.

"Norm called me at halftime and said I wasn't having enough fun out there," Daly said. "He said we weren't running the offense.

"I know the players went out there and gave everything they had. It was a must win because things hadn't been going well for us. I told them, 'I'm going to let you play. You're going to run up and down the court.'"

Greg Church and Gary Leonard fueled the run that carried the Tigers to a 58-48 lead with about 15 minutes to play.

"I don't think we lost all that much (confidence)," Leonard said of the Tigers, who were beaten Wednesday night at Oklahoma State. "We had some bad ballgames, but you can't win this many ballgames and not have confidence.

"It (the victory) was just in time. It's the whole staircase we jumped."

Oklahoma, 24-4 overall and 10-2 in the Big Eight, has held the No. 1 spot for two straight weeks after a stretch of four consecutive weeks in which the top-ranked team was defeated.

Oklahoma could have clinched its second straight title and the top seed in the league's postseason tournament with a victory.

Missouri, which trails the Sooners by one game with two to play, has won 16 straight at home, including 15 in a row this season, to go 23-6 and 9-3.

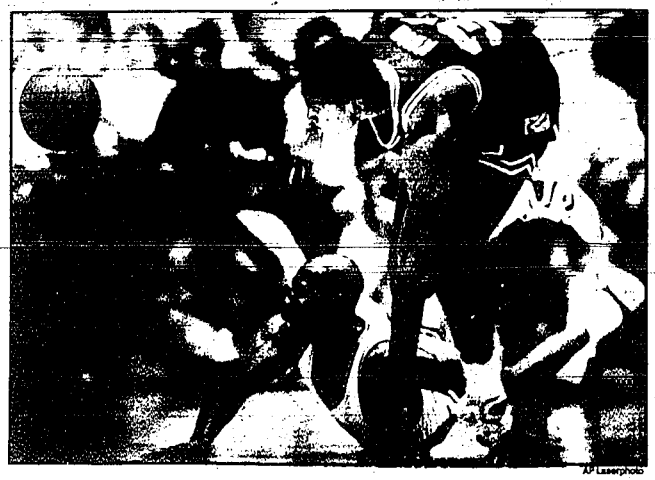

"In the second half, there was a five- or six-minute spurt in which they just took it to us," said Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs, whose team had become the first since Duke to hold the top spot in the poll for two consecutive weeks.

"They were working hard for good shots. It's hard to miss dunks. I thought there was that one little spot where they took control and kept control. I just thought we faltered in that one little spot."

The Sooners, who had made 50 percent of their shots this season, fell to 40 percent against Missouri.

"They shot the ball better than we did," Tubbs said. "They outrebounded us. They took it to the hole on us. When one team does that to another, you're going to see what happened today."

Stacey King scored 36 points for the Sooners.

Georgetown 63
St. John's 55

NEW YORK (AP) — Charles Smith and Alonzo Mourning each scored 14 points Saturday night to lead No. 3 Georgetown to a 63-55 victory over St. John's to clinch the Big East regular-season championship.

The Hoyas, 22-3 overall and 12-2 in the conference, will be the top seed for the conference tournament which begins March 9 at Madison Square Garden.

It was the third regular-season title for the Hoyas and the earliest any team has clinched the top spot in the conference's 10-year history.

St. John's, 14-11 and 5-9, had its NCAA tournament hopes dashed and are guaranteed its worst ever conference record. The Redmen were 8-8 in both 1984 and last season.

Georgetown seemed to be in control with a 40-27 halftime lead but the Redmen fought back with some outstanding defense and closed within 53-52 with 4:12 to play on a three-point play by Robert Werdann.

BYU 81
Utah 74

PROVO, Utah (AP) - Michael Smith scored 30 points and Marty Haws added 24 as Brigham Young defeated Utah 81-74 in a regionally-televised Western Athletic Conference basketball game.

BYU's win leaves both teams with identical 6-8 league records. The Cougars are 13-13 overall while the Utes are 15-14.

Twin Falls' Andy Toolson, a junior forward for BYU, scored 5 points.

Seton Hall 84
Providence 80

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Andrew Gaze hit all six of his 3-point shots and scored 22 of his 26 points in the first half as No. 15 Seton Hall spurted ahead then held on to defeat Providence 84-80 Saturday, assuring the Pirates of their best season in 36 years.

John Morton also scored 26 points as Seton Hall raised its record to 23-5 overall and 10-5 in the Big East. The 23 wins are the most for the school since 1952-53 when the Pirates went 31-2 and won the NIT.

South Carolina 77
Louisville 73

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — John Hudson scored 20 points and stripped Tony Kimbro of the ball with one second left to preserve South Carolina's 77-73 victory over No. 8 Louisville in a Metro Conference game Saturday.

The victory broke a 10-game losing streak against Louisville and was only South Carolina's second victory in the 13-game series.

The loss left the Cardinals at 19-7 overall and 8-3 in the conference.

North Carolina 100
Clemson 86

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Steve Bucknall scored a career-high 30 points, including five of eight 3-point shots, as No. 5 North Carolina beat Clemson 100-86 to take sole possession of first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference Saturday.

The Tar Heels, 24-5, raised their league record to 9-3, one-half game ahead of North Carolina State, which meets Virginia in a conference game Sunday. The victory, North Carolina's sixth in a row, also marked the Tar Heels' 34th consecutive victory over Clemson in Chapel Hill.

The Tigers fell to 16-9 and 5-7.

Ball State 76
Eastern Michigan 63

MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — Curtis Kidd scored 25 points, including four during Ball State's 13-point, go-ahead run in the first period, as the No. 20 Cardinals defeated Eastern Michigan 76-63 Saturday to clinch their first Mid American Conference title in seven years.

Ball State raised its record to 23-2 overall and 12-2 in the MAC, while the defending champion Hurons fell to 14-11 and 6-8.

LSU 88
UNLV 87

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Ricky Blanton hit a 3-point shot from the right baseline with four seconds left in the game to give Louisiana State University an 88-87 victory over 18th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas on Saturday.

UNLV, 20-7, took an 86-83 lead with 33 seconds left in the game on a pair of short jumpers by Greg Anthony, the first with 1:12 remaining.

Chris Jackson hit a jumper from just inside the 3-point line to narrow the margin to 86-85.

Anthony then missed the second shot on a one-and-one from the free throw line with 15 seconds left, and Jackson kept the ball from going out-of-bounds and controlled it for LSU.

Jackson and Lyle Mouton whipped the ball downcourt and got it to Blanton on the wing, and Blanton hit the winner.

LSU raised its season record to 20-8.

Jackson, a freshman, had 29 points, Blanton 18, Wayne Sims 16 and Vertel Singleton 13.

Stacey Augmon led UNLV with 25 points, while David Butler had 24 and Anthony 15.

Las Vegas led by nine points, 70-61, with 9:59 left in the game.

Notre Dame 80

ATLANTA (AP) — Dennis Scott scored 34 points and Brian Oliver added 26 as Georgia Tech stormed back from a 17-point deficit to beat Notre Dame 90-80 in Saturday.

Notre Dame jumped to a 10-2 lead and dominated the first half, building a lead of 30-13 when Elmer Bennett made two free throws with 6:55 remaining in the period.

Tech, making only seven of 30 shots from the field, trailed 41-30 at halftime, but the Yellow Jackets, 19-9, came on strong in the second half, which Scott started with a 3-point basket, one of five he had in the game. Oliver's 17-foot jumper tied it 52-52 with 11:47 left and Tech never trailed again.

Michigan 92
Wisconsin 70

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Michigan's Glen Rice scored 20 of his season-high 38 points in the first half to lead the 13th-ranked Wolverines to a 92-70 Big Ten victory over Wisconsin Saturday.

The performance moved Rice past Cazzie Russell into third place on Michigan's all-time scoring list with 2,176 points.

Rice hit his first nine shots, including six of his seven 3-pointers.

The win avenged a 71-68 loss in Madison on Jan. 21 that started Michigan's slide in the Big Ten, and improved the Wolverines to 9-5 in the conference and 21-6 overall.

Indiana 75
Minnesota 62

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Joe Hillman scored 15 points, including a basket that started a game-ending 17-4 run, lending the No. 4 Hoosiers to a 75-62 victory over Minnesota Saturday, snapping the Gophers' 12-game home winning streak.

Hillman's basket with 5:35 left gave Indiana, 23-5 overall and 13-1 in the Big Ten, a 60-58 lead.

Hillman added another basket in the streak, while Todd Jadlow, who finished with 17 points, had five and Eric Anderson, who finished with 14, had four.

The Hoosiers are the first Big Ten team to beat Minnesota, 14-10 and 6-8, at Williams Arena this season. The Gophers upset Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and Ohio State at home when those teams were ranked in the Top 15.

But winning at "The Barn" has not been a problem for the Hoosiers. They've beaten Minnesota nine straight times there and 15 straight overall.

St. Mary's 67
Gonzaga 63

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Al Lewis scored 20 points, including two foul shots with 13 seconds left in overtime that sent No. 19 St. Mary's over Gonzaga 67-63 and gave the Gaels the West Coast Athletic Conference regular season championship.

St. Mary's, which moved into the Associated Press Top 20 this week for the first time in the school's history, improved to 23-3 overall and 11-2 in the league. The victory, coupled with Pepperdine's loss at San Francisco, assured St. Mary's of the No. 1 seed in the WCAC tournament in San Francisco March 4-6.

Stanford 60
Oregon State 58

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — Howard Wright scored 21 points and freshman Adam Keefe sank two of four free throws in the final 48 seconds Saturday as 16th-ranked Stanford edged Oregon State 60-58.

Stanford, 14-3 in the conference and 23-5 overall, took a 58-56 lead on Wright's basket with 1:1 minute to go.

But Oregon State's Gary Payton sank a pair of free throws with 58 seconds remaining to tie the score.

Keefe sank one of two free throws with 48 seconds to go to make it 59-58. The Beavers, who dropped to 11-5 in the Pac-10 and 19-6 overall, called timeout with 41 seconds left and worked for the final shot.

Eric Knox, surrounded by Stanford defenders, missed a 10-foot bank shot with 10 seconds to go.

Filer

McCandless, whose game-high 27 points included five three-pointers, opted to drive inside drawing a foul on Declo guard Jay Hamilton, converting both shots, then rebounding Shane Osterhout's miss at the other end and returning to the stripe with 17 seconds left. Still, the Hornets refused to wilt.

Greg Kowitz concluded the scoring from just inside three-point range, but Steadman picked off the ensuing inbounds pass, calling a timeout with three seconds on the clock. Two quick passes later Steadman's desperation shot from the baseline bounced away.

"They're a good ball team," said Patterson of the Hornets, to whom Filer had lost twice after winning the teams' first encounter of the season on Declo's home court. "They got a couple of turnovers and came storming back. We knew it was going to be a hard-fought game all the way.

Hornet fans must have wondered what was in store early as McCandless opened with a three-pointer. Steadman answered for Declo in the paint and first McCandless, then Shane Blakeslee ddrained long-bombs on Filer's next two possessions to make it 9-2 1:33 into the game.

"We thought maybe we could get in a little bit of a zone," explained Declo coach Ron Knowles. "Filer's too good a bunch of shooters and they proved that right away."

Kowitz then scored twice, the first a three-pointer, keying a 9-0 run that gave Declo an 11-9 lead. But the Hornets' failure to protect the basketball — nine turnovers to Filer's three in the first half — cost them the next six points.

Shane Osterhoutz Greg Turner and Jeff Steadman negated that with Steadman's putback knotting the contest at 22 before a Clint Lutz bomb sent Filer up before the break.

New faces off both benches slowed the second-quarter scoring somewhat, but Brian Coon nailed two baskets during a 9-4 spurt that allowed Filer to move up 37-31 by halftime.

Saturday's results sends both Canyon Conference co-champs into next week's state A-3 tournament at Rigby. Filer will face District 6 runnerup West Jefferson at 6:25 p.m. Thursday and Declo has the less enviable task of meeting two-time state champion Lapwai at 10 p.m.

"I guess if we have to play Lapwai in the tournament, the opening round is the place to do it," said Knowles. "We were there last year and we're just happy to be going back."

Filer, 18-6 on the year, got 16 points from starting guard Clint Lutz, while Osterhout's 15 and Steadman's 13 backed Hamilton's effort for the 19-7 Hornets.

mates had experienced following the Idaho game. "Thursday was emotional, but we knew we had to come back for these guys. They always play hard."

With eccentic forward Steve Garrity putting up 22 points, nine rebounds and one bloody nose, the Bengals made it interesting. But the loss didn't do their flagging prospects of making the Big Sky postseason tournament much good. Idaho State, which put its hopes of playing after next week's regular-season finales at Idaho and Eastern Washington in serious jeopardy by losing to Montana State Friday, fell to 4-10 in league and 9-16 for the season.

Boise State, 12-2 and 21-4, is riding high with a one-game lead over Big Sky runnerup Idaho, where the Broncos play on Thursday.

The conference champion hosts the postseason tourney, beginning March 9.

Boise State's three soon-to-depart seniors, Foster, Sperry and Chris Childs, said their game was affected by the farewell ceremony the school held for them prior to the game.

"They shouldn't have done it," said Childs, who entered the interview room with son Jesse on the his shoulders.

"It was hard to to," said Sperry.

Childs ought to know: he was 2-for-8 from the field, even though he dealt seven assists. Foster was more in the flow, drilling 10 of 13 shots for 23 points to go with his seven rebounds. He helped the Broncos pick it up after the technical.

"We just wanted to come out and play our best defense. We gave them a lot of easy shots in the first half," he said.

Forward David Lowery contributed 12 points, five rebounds and three assists for Boise State, which has beaten ISU seven in a row since losing a one-point decision to the Bengals in the first round of the 1986-87 Big Sky postseason tourney.

Even after Minico's 17-point run, however, Mountain Home didn't die. Just after Ennen's second putback, McCabe hit a three-point from the corner and then added a cripple off a steal and a driving shot to narrow the margin to 73-66.

But with 2:33 remaining, Poulton got Minico going again and the Spartans traded field goals with McCabe two more times. In the closing seconds Poulton hit four free throws to establish the final margin.

The win squared Minico's season record at 13-13, while Mountain Home wound up 12-13.

CSI

offering a hamburger to everyone attending a game in which CSI holds the opposition to less than 60 points.

Offensively Trenkle said he could complain — but not loudly — because "in the first half we didn't take the best shot, we took the first shot. And we only — only now — hit 50 percent. We ended the night at 56 percent because our shot selection was better in the second half."

Along the way, CSI hit 28-51 from the foul line, had a dozen steals and lost only six turnovers — two of those being offensive fouls. Sergio Gomez and Cliff Martin split 22 rebounds.

"Everyone who played did everything positive to get ready for regionals," Trenkle continued.

Afterward, CSI Athletic Director Karl Kleinkopf reminded fans that regional tickets go on sale at 8 a.m. Monday at the gymnasium. He said access would be through the north doors — back of the gymnasium.

Prices are $12 for a tournament pass and Kleinkopf reminded that if the tournament is sold out, there probably would be little chance of buying tickets at the gate, especially for sessions in which CSI is playing. He noted that their should be some available for Thursday afternoon's opening session and perhaps some seats will free up after the CSI game, about 8 p.m. Thursday night. But if successful, CSI will be playing the late game Friday and Saturday nights with little chance for extra seating.

"As soon as we click off 3,700 through the gate, the doors will close," he said.

With Saturday night's results still unavailable at press time, it would appear that CSI will open either against Ricks or Snow College Thursday. North Idaho will be in the lower bracket, playing Treasure Valley or Eastern Utah. Utah Valley and Dixie will be in the upper bracket, playing Thursday afternoon from among Ricks, Snow, Treasure Valley or Eastern Utah.

Charlotte hands Spurs their 10th straight loss

Pro basketball

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Kelly Tripucka scored 40 points and Kurt Rambis added 16 points and a career-high 22 rebounds, giving the Charlotte Hornets a 124-113 victory Saturday night over the San Antonio Spurs, who lost their 10th consecutive game.

The Hornets went on a 17-5 run to open the fourth quarter, turning a one-point lead into a 106-93 advantage. Rex Chapman scored 11 of his 21 points during the run and Tim Kempton scored five.

With the loss, the Spurs tied a club record.

Earl Cureton scored 13 of his 17 points in the second half and grabbed 12 rebounds for the Hornets, who outscored the Spurs 71-53 in the last two periods. Michael Holton added 18 points for Charlotte.

Willie Anderson led the Spurs with 28 points and Dallas Comegys added 21.

With 10:37 left in the third quarter and the Spurs up 60-59, San Antonio's Frank Brickowski was ejected for elbowing Rambis.

Brickowski left the game with 14 points and 10 rebounds, and the Spurs never threatened after that.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Mark Aguirre came off the bench to score 31 in his fourth game for the Detroit Pistons as they rolled to a 113-95 victory Saturday night over the New Jersey Nets.

Detroit opened the game hitting six of 19 shots and fell behind 16-12. But the Pistons took the lead for good with a 9-2 spurt that included five points by Dumars, who finished with 26 points and 10 assists.

Detroit later outscored the Nets 13-4, with Aguirre and Dumars scoring four points.

FloJo makes it official: She's through running

Track

NEW YORK (AP) — Florence Griffith Joyner cried on her way to the bank.

Wearing a full-length fur coat befitting her new millionaire status, a teary-eyed Griffith Joyner retired from track Saturday, saying she wanted to pursue her interests in writing and acting.

"From now on, I have decided to run on a different track, and to strive for the best of which I am capable in a different field," Griffith Joyner, 29, said at a packed news conference at a small midtown hotel room.

"Life has many things to offer all of us, and since the Olympics, many challenges and opportunities have been presented to me. I want to pursue them ... "

Since the Seoul Games, in which she won three gold medals and one silver, FloJo has been deluged with offers for television and movie parts, magazine and newspaper layouts, commercial endorsements and speaking engagements.

The long-term offers she has accepted include those from Japanese companies Mizuno and Mitsubishi, a German film-copying firm called AGFA, Proxy shoes, MCA Universal and LJN Toys for promotion of her FloJo dolls, and a company offering service to temporary employees.

In addition, she is on the verge of signing with one of the major soft-drink companies.

Welty fourth at USA/Mobil

NEW YORK — Twin Falls' Amber Welty, an Idaho State University senior, finished fourth in the women's high jump at the USA/Mobil Indoor Track and Field Championships here Friday night.

Welty, the defending NCAA outdoor high jump champ, cleared 6 feet, ¾ inch to tie with Trish King of the Reebok Track Club for fourth place. The event was won by Olympic gold medalist Louise Ritter, who leaped 6-5.

Troy Kemp, 1988 Boise State University graduate from the Bahamas, won the men's high jump with a mark of 7-6½. Another BSU alum, Jake Jacoby, tied for third place, also with 7-6½, but Kemp won the competition on the basis of fewer jumps.

Mayotte upsets Agassi

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — No. 3 seed and two-time defending champion Tim Mayotte upset top-seeded Andre Agassi 6-4, 4-6, 6-4 Saturday in a semifinal of the $602,500 U.S. Pro Indoor Tennis Championships.

The victory advanced Mayotte to Sunday's final against the winner of a Saturday night semifinal between No. 2 seed Boris Becker of West Germany and No. 4 seed Mikael Pernfors of Sweden.

Webb wins True Value Open

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Wayne Webb broke a four-year victory drought Saturday by rallying to beat Venezuela's Amleto Monticelli 216-207 in the title game to capture the Professional Bowlers Association $160,000 True Value Open.

Webb was 27 pins behind through five frames and did not take the lead until the eighth.

Welty fourth at USA/Mobil

NEW YORK — Twin Falls' Amber Welty, an Idaho State University senior, finished fourth in the women's high jump at the USA/Mobil Indoor Track and Field Championships here Friday night.

Welty, the defending NCAA outdoor high jump champ, cleared 6 feet, ¾ inch to tie with Trish King of the Reebok Track Club for fourth place. The event was won by Olympic gold medalist Louise Ritter, who leaped 6-5.

Troy Kemp, 1988 Boise State University graduate from the Bahamas, won the men's high jump with a mark of 7-6½. Another BSU alum, Jake Jacoby, tied for third place, also with 7-6½, but Kemp won the competition on the basis of fewer jumps.
